Nixon Loses Appeal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A federal appeals court Friday told President Nixon he has no constitutional right to keep his Watergate tapes from a grand jury unless he can prove that releasing them may harm U.S. national security.

The U.S. circuit court of appeals for the District of Columbia ordered Nixon to surrender the tapes to chief U.S. district Judge John J. Sirica, ruling that only the courts can determine whether any part of them may be kept secret.

"To leave the proper scope and application of executive privilege to the president's sole discreton would represent a mixing, rather than a separation of executive and judicial functions . . ." the court said in an unsigned 41-page opinion.

"The constitution mentions no executive privileges, much less any absolute executive privileges."

Nixon's insistence that his political mandate and the constitution give him an absolute right to keep anything he chooses secret, the court said, "are invitations to re-fashion the constitution, and we reject them."

Anticipating a certain White House appeal to the Supreme Court, the court stayed its order directing Nixon to surrender the tapes for five days.

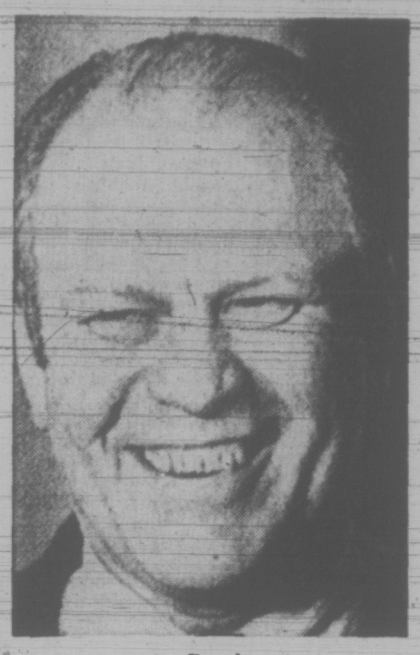
The decision was issued in the name of all seven judges who heard the historic case. But two of them, Nixon oppointees George Mackinnon and Malcolm Wilkey, attached separate opinions totalling 144 pages disagreeing strongly with the court's reasoning in reaching its decision.

The court urged Nixon and Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox—who is seeking tape recordings of nine Nixon conversations with his aides—to try again to reach agreement about which portions should go to the grand jury. Previous efforts at out-of-court settlement collapsed three weeks ago.

Should renewed efforts fail, the court said, Nixon must cooperate with Sirica—who ruled Aug. 26 that Nixon must submit the tapes to him for review. The appeals court said Nixon "may decline to transmit that portion of the material" in the tapes that "relates to national defence or foreign relations."

But it said Cox would be entitled to "inspect" the president's claim of secrecy for such material and that Sirica would decide whether the claim were valid.

A spokesman for Cox said he was "very pleased with the decision" and agreed that another attempt at negotiations should be made.



Ford

Football Star To V-P

Times News Services

WASHINGTON—President Nixon Friday picked for vice-president a former football star whose Congressional record is so popular he will have little trouble getting majority approval from his colleagues.

Selection of republican wheel-horse and minority House leader Gerald R. Ford, 60, to succeed the resigned Spiro T. Agnew was welcomed by members of Congress with such acclaim the Michigan member might be sworn into office well before the end of October.

The nomination was formally submitted to the Senate and House today. Both chambers were meeting in rare sessions to formally receive the nomination.

It was immediately routed to committee—the judiciary committee in the House and the rules committee in the Senate.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield predicted the nomination would be approved "by the end of the month." The House was expected to act equally swiftly.

In making his selection, Nixon clearly wanted to avoid a major clash with Congress at a time when he is seeking to recover from the Watergate political scandal.

"It is vital that we turn away from the obsessions of the past and turn to the great challenges of the future," said Nixon in his announcement speech.

Warning of the dangers that confront America, Nixon said "This is a time for a new beginning for America, a new beginning in which we all dedicate ourselves to the task of meeting the challenges we face, seizing

Timber Taxes Hiked $30M

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

The provincial government announced Friday a new system of appraising stumpage rates for timber which will bring in an extra $30 million a year from logging operators.

Resources Minister Robert Williams unveiled a new "wood resource system," which he said is designed to establish the true value of the province's timber stands.

The system takes effect Monday in the Interior region, which accounts for about half of the timber cut in the province. More recent statistics show that the Interior region, which takes in about 80 per cent of the province's area, accounts for about $1.3 billion worth of timber products per year.

The principal effect of the new system is to eliminate the extremely low stumpage rates paid by logging operators for small, low-grade timber. This kind of wood accounts for 38 per cent of the total amount of wood cut in the Interior region, Williams said.

The low-grade wood formerly cost logging operators only 55 cents per cunit (100 cubic feet of wood). Williams said this amount of wood, converted for example into 100 pieces of eight-foot-long two-by-four lumber, fetches prices of as much as $144, money which goes directly to the logging operators who have had to pay the government only the 55 cents in stumpage rates.

"Fifty-five-cent wood in this day and age is entirely unacceptable," Williams said.

The other main steps in the new system:

—Minimum and maximum stumpage rate structures are altered, with the maximum amount chargeable to a logging operator now an open-ended figure.

—Logging operators will be able to recover costs incurred by construction of logging roads faster than under the previous system.

—Log values will include the value of lumber, pulp chips and pulp logs instead of just lumber productiion as under the previous system.

The new system is effective Monday for each timber-cutting licence which comes up for renewal. Licences have always come up every two years, but will now be renewed each year.

Before a figure for stumpage rate is arrived at by the B.C. Forest Service, consideration will be given to the individual operator's costs of production, the condition of the trees in the stand he is cutting and a calculation of a "reasonable profit" for the operator.

Williams was asked if this type of formula is not a sophisticated means of imposing profit controls on the forest industry.

"You could call it that if we did not own the trees," he said. "But we own the trees so this is just a sophisticated method of determining the value of the trees which the people of the province own."

He described the new stumpage system as "not a tax — it's a price for the raw materials they (logging operators) need for their industry."

"The new system is not just an increase in the price that the people of the province will receive — important as that is — but a fational system that relates to the real values and real costs of operating," Williams said.

The minister said that

CEASEFIRE PERSONAL

PREK THNOT RIVER, Cambodia (AP) — A Cambodian government company commander and an officer of the Khmer Rouge Communist-led insurgents have established their own personal ceasefire along the Prek Thnot River, Phnom Penh's southern defence line.

The government company commander, a second lieutenant, said of himself and the Communist officer: "We both want peace and to be friends."

The lieutenant said the Khmer Rouge battalion commander called him on the radio four days ago and asked if there were any Americans fighting with him.

When the answer was no, the insurgent commander said he was tired of the war and did not want to kill Cambodians.

The two men then agreed via the radio not to shoot at one another's position.

The government lieutenant said: "My commander orders me to attack across the river every day, but why should my company go first? I have a ceasefire."

The Khmer Rouge insurgent commander, Lt.-Col. Sau Kon, on the south side of the river near Kompong Kantuout, 13 miles southwest of Phnom Penh, said on the radio that it was difficult to talk about peace because his North Vietnamese commanders will learn of it.

Kompong Kantuot was the scene of heavy fighting from Sept. 19 until Oct. 6 when anti-government troops forced government units north across the Prek Thnot River.

Jordan Enters War

Times News Services

Jordan entered the war against Israel today by sending a contingent of its best troops to Syria where Israeli armored columns broke through Syrian lines on a 60-mile front, crushed an Iraqi tank force and drove to within less than 20 miles of Damascus.

An Amman announcement said King Hussein had sent a "group of our most efficient military formations" into Syria but there was no immediate indication Hussein had thrown his full 75,000-man army or 200-plane air force into the struggle or that he was opening a third front against Israel.

Amman's announcement came as Israeli tanks backed by heavy air power battled up the road to Damascus and as dogfights raged over the Golan battleground. Tel Aviv said an Iraqi armored unit, part of an expeditionary force sent to Syria, had been crushed.

When Hussein opened a third front in the 1967 war he lost old Jerusalem and the west bank and saw the total destruction of his army and air force.

The announcement was broadcast over Amman Radio exactly one week after Egyptian armored units crossed the Suez Canal into the Sinai and Syrian tanks attacked on a broad front in the Golan Heights.

Jordan said Hussein's move was aimed at protecting the Syrian front by preventing Israel from occupying the frontier hills which would also threaten Jordan, and to "freeze" a large number of Israeli troops along the 360-mile-long Israeli-Jordan frontier.

There was no immediate Israeli reaction although Israel Radio broke into a military commentary to broadcast coded messages to reserves not yet called up. The commentary itself was telling how the Iraqis abandoned 80 tanks when the Israelis attacked northeast of Damascus.

Damascus communiques emphasized the intense air war over Syria and reported "violent ground battles" without giving a hint of how they were going. In Cairo a loud explosion sounded, followed immediately by an air raid alert and an all clear. There was no explanation.

The Israelis earlier reported that they encountered Iraqi reinforcements on the Syrian front lines, probably elements of a full 13,000 to 15,000-man division in the area. Israel speculated that the Iraquis were being used to replace Syrian soldiers who have been pulled back toward Damascus.

Associated Press correspondent Paul Kohn said the route to Damascus was littered with wrecked Syrian tanks and charred b dies and that Syrian soldiers were surrendering to the Jewish forces. Based on reports from the Israeli command and from correspondents, Damascus was nearly within range of the Israelis' 175-millimetre howitzers.

In the Sinai Desert theatre, an Israeli communique reported "local armor and artillery duels" Friday but little ground action. Egypt said it destroyed 32 tanks and armored cars and killed or wounded 200 Israelis in desert action Friday.

An Egyptian communique also said that its forces sank three Israeli missile boats and

RAIN CURTAIN FALLS ON INDIAN SUMMER

While Victorians grumbled about the rain, weatherman Michael Dolan this morning found a silver lining.

As long as "moist air" continues to flow from the Pacific, said Dolan, there isn't any danger of a freeze-up or snow.

In the last 24 hours the weather office at Victoria International Airport has recorded 1.69 inches of rain — most of it Friday night.

For the next few days Victorians can prepare for cloudy skies, more rain and "perhaps some heavy downpours," said Dolan.

The rainy season is definitely here, he said, and there's little chance for a late Indian summer.

Tourists Stay To Watch War

By GERALD CLARK
Editor of Montreal Star
Special to The Times

TEL AVIV — This war, apart from any official name it earns, can be called the Tourist War. A surprisingly large number of tourists are floating about Israel, not, of course, on the northern or southern fronts, but in some instances sufficiently close to the action to qualify as committed observers.

For instance, there is the case of a girl named Daren Chentow from Syracuse, New York. Daren, aged 18, was in a kibbutz, Kafar Blum in the Upper Galilee, when hostilities erupted and Syrian tanks came into bitter combat with Israeli tanks not too many miles away.

She managed to reach her parents on an overseas line to say she was all right and so were comrades from various parts of the United States and Canada. Then she read her father, Irving Chentow, a list of people to ring to relay messages their children were well, including, he recalls ruefully, someone in Saskatchewan, so that he estimates his phone bill ran into hundreds of dollars.

But the point is that he pleaded with Daren to return home immediately and she refused. She was not going to run out of newly-made Israeli friends. Chentow seized the first available flight from New York — in fact, that was when I met him — and on landing at Lod he set out for Kafar Blum on a long bus ride.

Kafar Blum is not exactly an austere settlement.

While foreign youths spend a few months picking cotton or engaging in other farm chores, they also find time to relax around the pool. And it was while thus engaged that Daren snapped pictures of an aerial dogfight overhead but that was about as close as the war reached.

I later ran into Irving Chentow quite by chance, and he, instead of dragging his daughter back to Syracuse, had decided to spend a few days himself on the kibbutz. His only worry is what his boss will say because he failed to show up for work.

Another kibbutz on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, Sof Gindsar, operates a comfortable guest house that accommodates 120 people. When the battle broke out last Sat-

Expert Sees $400 Gold

MONTREAL (UPI) — The dollar will be devalued by 20 per cent in 1974. The true dollar price of gold in 1985 will be $400 an ounce. Japan will become the strongest trading nation in the world and the Dow Jones average will pass away in 1979.

Harry Schultz, international investment analyst and former newspaper magnate predicted a bleak economic future of the American investor in has address today to the fifth international money seminar.

Schultz's speech also predicted Canada would become more independent of the United States, through diversified trade patterns.

Schultz said the dollar would be "devalued by about 20 per cent in 1974 as part of the monetary reform kick.

Gold would be officially $200 in 1985, but the dollar's power to buy foreign currency, outside the U.S., will be half of its domestic power.

Wild currency fluctuations, couple with rising socialism in the U.S. and escalating inflation will lead to the demise of the Dow Jones average, while the Internal Revenue Service finds itself powerless in the face of declining dollar values, Shultz also said.

Fuel Shortage Goes To School

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Oregon elementary and secondary schools will be asked to close for a month this winter to conserve electricity and heating fuel, Governor Tom McCall said Friday.

In Washington U.S. Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton said there will be a national shortage of fuel this winter of between 7 and 20 per cent, depending on the weather. He predicted sharp price increases.

PAY PACKETS 27-YEAR LOW

SASKATOON (CP) — The economic position of the average Canadian in terms of real income is the worst since 1946, Joseph Morris of Ottawa, executive vice-president of the Canadian Labor Congress, said Friday.

Meanwhile, he told delegates to the annual convention of the Saskatchewan Federation of Labor, corporation profits are skyrocketing.

Morris said that with half a million Canadians unemployed, prime bank rates at a record nine per cent and with the type of federal government now in power "there is unfortunately little chance of any real improvement in the situation."

B.C. Tightens Rules On Crown Leases

Citizenship requirements for persons obtaining leases and licences of crown land have been tightened.

Resources Minister Robert Williams said Friday the restrictions will reduce alienation of B.C. crown land to non-Canadians.

From now on, leases or licences of crown land will be limited to Canadian citizens or landed immigrants as will transfers of existing leases and licences.

Performance conditions will be required of non-Canadians who are given leases or licences of crown land. Ranches or land with improvments on it will be reviewed on a short term basis at the discretion of the provincial director of lands.

Corporations leasing crown land or given licences will be required to fulfil requirements of the Companies Act which say that the majority of the directors on companies must be Canadian residents and at least one director must be a resident of B.C.

Williams said "there is not much doubt among the people of the province that crown land should not be alienated to non-citizens of the province."

Trade Pact Ends China Talks

PEKING (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau concluded his official four-day visit to Peking with warm words, a new trade agreement, a private meeting with Chairman Mao Tse-tung and a new bamboo baby carriage.

In one of the busiest days of the tour, Trudeau wrapped up the Peking portion of his visit by signing the trade agreement, visiting the Forbidden City, talking for more than an hour with Chairman Mao and shopping with his wife Margaret in a downtown department store.

And the final event was a huge banquet given by Trudeau for his Chinese hosts.

"We do not assess in identical fashion all aspects of today's world," he told the grand banquet in the Great Hall of the People. "With our distinct histories, geographies and culture, it is inconceivable that we could see eye to eye on all issues — but we do agree on the fundamental need for world peace, and the equally fundamental need for all countries to determine their own fate and design their own future."

Trudeau and Premier Chou En-lai formally signed an agreement during the afternoon that is certain to increase trade between the two countries, and the prime minister revealed that a large number of other agreements had been reached which will result in a greatly stepped-up exchange of individuals between Canada and China. Canadian officials were enthusiastic about the talks which, they said, will create a whole series of new bonds between the two countries.

The effect of the general trade agreeent is to give the "most-favored-nation treatment" to goods travelling between the two countries, that is, good tariff rates. Furthermore there was agreement to establish a joint trade committee which will meet annually, and to promote the interchange of individuals and delegations engaged in trade.

TALKING TOMBSTONE

JACKSON, Mich. (UPI) — Donald Wells' tombstone doesn't just stand there.

It chats, sings, plays stereo music, shows movies and slides.

And is bulletproof.

Wells thinks it's a great idea.

"Tombstones haven't changed much since the Egyptians built pyramids for their pharoahs, he said Friday.

He applied for a patent for what he calls his talking tombstone and by next week, he said, he plans to introduce the first working model.

It is made of polycarbonate. The slides, films, tapes and stereo equipment is enclosed inside and solar batteries will operate the whole thing.

The idea, he said, is that mourners can play the voices of departed loved ones and view photos and film of them at the same time.

He said he got the idea from his father during a conversation about a tombstone for a dead relative. "Suddenly, Bingo, I got this great idea," he said.

"Anyway, it's sure better than just looking at those dull slabs," Wells said. "That's grim, man."

Egypt's Pride Shows

CAIRO (AP) — In eight days of fighting, the Egyptian army restored a sense of national pride and purpose to Egypt.

Egyptian soldiers at the front, doctors treating wounded, telephone linemen repairing bomb damage and housewives waiting in line for food have a new sense of self-respect and assurance, reflected in their bearing and conversation.

Foreign correspondents taken across the Suez canal to the front, or to a farming community hospital to visit civilians injured in Israeli air attack were permitted to question everyone.

At the front, and at the hospital, foreigners were impressed with the calm efficiency of soldiers, doctors and nurses.

Everything was functioning, there was no panic, although incoming Israeli rockets and artillery sometimes made conversation impossible and kept visitors jumping into shelters.

By crossing to the east bank of the canal and beyond the Israeli Bar-Lev defence line, the Egyptian army showed it had the weapons, planning, logistical support and above all the courage, which many had come to question in the years since the six-day war of 1967.

President Anwar Sadat, once the object of criticism for permitting a war economy with no war, has won the support of the people. Editorials praised his decision to cross the canal after efforts to find a peaceful solution failed.

The war plunged this city of six million—double the population of Israel—into darkness, with civil defence units stopping vehicles which show bright lights. A total blackout is in force in many areas of the city.

The nightclubs are closed, the belly dancers are resting, but the hard-currency gambling casinos in the international hotels continue to spin.

The tourism ministry and French and United States governments are arranging to send many of the 3,000 stranded tourists out of the war zone.

But no embassy has given any indication of evacuating its own residents.

Food supplies are adequate. Shortages in the first three days, when crowds besieged food stores and markets, have been alleviated. The basics are there although new taxes are being imposed on luxury items, and rationing, in force here since the Second World War has been sharpened.

Many Egyptians are buying locally-produced products instead of imported higher priced foreign foodstuffs, clothing and appliances for the first time. The air and sea ports remain closed and imported items are in short supply.

urday some left immediately — but 70 stayed on, a party of non-Jewish Swedes, many of them elderly, and walking about with canes. Gunfire from the Golan heights was mere miles away, and other nationals were ordered by their governments to clear out of the Middle East.

Few tourists remained in Israel when the first round was fired six years ago, and Israelis had a sensation of being deserted. This time everyone was taken by surprise, and while some did grab whatever flights were available, El Al was the only carrier that operated with any frequency for the first few days, the other airlines cancelled schedules, many remained on, and are still here.

The Tel Aviv Hilton has 200 Canadians and Americans registered — in addition to about 100 media people from around the world — filling more than a third its rooms. Next week, with a convention of the United Jewish Appeal, it expects to be full.

Israeli radio reports on El Al flights from New York and Montreal carrying tourists who say they had planned a trip long ago and were not going to cancel because of the war. The broadcasts are splendid for local moral — and so was the report that a Hadassah group had arrived from the United States to volunteer blood. The Israelis asked for donors under the age of 60 to step forward but none could qualify.

There is no excessive hardship for visitors. Taxis are scarce — most drivers are away at the fronts — and at night they virtually disappear because of the difficulty of manoeuvring in the blackout.

Anyway, most restaurants, lacking staff, are closed. But what does carry on is the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra which gave a concert Friday night under the direction of Zubin Mehta, who is something of a hero to Israelis for his appearance now as well as during the Six Day War. For tourists, daylight sightseeing goes on as usual, and there is always the hotel swimming pool.

Transistor radios are kept tuned within hearing distance, so no tourist needs to feel guilty that he might be missing the regular bulletins. The skies are beautifully blue and bright, and, except for the sound of aircraft from time to time, you wouldn't know there was a war on.

their escorts in the Gulf of Suez.

Tel Aviv radio said the Egyptians were "bringing up ground-to-air missiles" on the Egyptian front, adding "it is not known whether the missiles have actually crossed the canal."

Gen. Haim Herzog, the radio's authoritative military commentator, said a deployment of missiles across the canal could signal Arab plans to expand their Sinai beachhead.

In Cairo, however, the semi-official newspaper Al Ahram said today that the first priority of the Egyptian army was to inflict the highest possible losses on the Israelis without advancing.

Meanwhile the United Nations Security Council adjourned its fourth debate on Middle East fighting Friday night, and diplomats said no session will be held before Monday without a major change on the battlefield.

In Washington, U.S. defence department officials said Soviet transport planes have delivered at least 1,000 tons of weapons and ammunition to Syria and Egypt since midweek.

However, Israeli air attacks on Syrian and Egyptian airfields appear to have impeded the Russian airlift.

Some Russian transport planes were reported to have turned back from Syria and headed home because Syrian airfields were too badly damaged to land.

Tax Hike?

under present market conditions, which are reflecting high prices for wood products, the increase in revenue to the province as a result of the new wood appraisal system will be about $30 million per year."

Revenue for the entire province from the forest industry for the first five months of this fiscal year has been $117 million. So the new system will mean an increase of about 20 per cent in stumpage revenue per year.

Williams said officials of the forest industry have expressed reservations about the new system, adding that a representative of the Council of Forest Industries had called him at noon Friday, asking for a further delay. The government had already delayed implementation of the new system by one month from the original intended date of Sept. 15.

The minister said the new system involves some good news and some bad news for the forest industry. The bad news is that logging operators will be required to pay substantially more for the cheaper grades of wood, which was formerly sold to them at a low price as an incentive to start operations in areas of poor quality timber.

The good news is that individual analysis of specific operations will benefit operators in poorer standards of timber since generalized guidelines will no longer be used in the calculation of how much lumber should be produced from a certain area of land.

Under the new system, there will be no maximum figure which can be charged to logging operators for stumpage rates. The former maximum was 60 per cent of the gross profit obtained by the operator, with the gross profit being the difference between the selling price of the lumber produced and the operator's costs of producing it.

This means that anywhere up to 100 per cent of the operator's gross profit could now go to the government in stumpage rates, an unlikely situation, but possible.

Williams said provision for a "reasonable profit" for the operator willl be calculated into the stumpage rate which he is charged and that there will be increased profit levels allowed during times of good market conditions.

This will allow the operators to prepare themselves for poor market conditions and drops in prices for their products, Williams said.

In any event, the stumpage rates charged will be directly tied to the price levels of the market, as has been the case in the past.

Under the previous stumpage system, logging operators customarily received compensation for their costs of construction of logging roads through long-term credits in their stumpage accounts with the Forest Service.

Now they will be compensated immediately for the costs which the Forest Service approves, representing an accelerated write-off of their expenses.

Williams said all logging roads constructed by private logging operators will be available to the public, subject to conditions for fire hazard and logging operations.

The effect of calculating other values besides lumber value in logs is that wood chips used by pulp mills will produce revenue for the province for the first time.

Williams said almost one-third of the province's pulp mills pay nothing directly to the Crown for the raw material which is owned by the public.

The minister said he could not give a time estimate of when the new stumpage system will be applied to the other half of the province's forest industry — that operating in the coastal area of the province.

BIKATHON OCT. 27

About 100 students from Shoreline Junior Secondary School will pedal 36 miles on Oct. 27 in a bikathon to raise money for the school band's proposed trip to the United Kingdom in March.

Band president David Jones said the starting line will be at the school yard on Shoreline Road and the course stretches to Matheson Lake and back.

About 100 band members hope to tour the UK during their three-week trip, which hopefully will include concerts.

DISASTER TRAINING

The Victoria branch of the Red Cross is offering a one-night course to train volunteers to handle welfare relief centres if a disaster hits the city.

Under an agreement signed earlier this year between the provincial civil defence league and the B.C. division of the Red Crosss, the relief centres would provide food, lodging, clothing and information services for victims of a disaster.

The course will be held in the Red Cross headquarters at 1046 Fort from 7-10 p.m. Oct. 15 and is open to anyone interested.

the opportunities for greatness and meeting the dangers wherever they are, at home and abroad."

The post of vice-president, only a heartbeat away from the presidency, carries an annual salary of $62,500 and a $10,000 expense account, both taxable.

Agnew, who held the post for almost five years, will go before a television audience Monday night to discuss events which led to his disgrace and resignation.

House of Representatives colleagues speak of Ford as dogged, pleasant, ambitious and loyal.

The late President Lyndon Johnson didn't prize him so highly — once referring to him as "a nice fellow but he played too much football without a helmet."

The affable, pipe-smoking former Big Ten football star rose from the ranks of House Republicans 10 years ago in a sudden coup that installed him as chairman of the party caucus.

Two years later he vaulted into the party leadership post and remained there until President Nixon picked him Friday.

When his wife Betty was asked once how she would describe the Fords, she wordlessly traced the sign for "square" with her fingers.

Betty is a former Sunday school teacher and the Fords are regular Episcopalian Anglican church-goers. Their four children are mostly grown up, with a 16-year-old daughter as youngest and three sons ranging from 17 to 22.

Ford's loyalty and middle-American integrity probably recommended him most to Nixon, a close political friend for almost as long — 25 years — as Ford has been a member of the House of Representatives.

As a member for the border state of Michigan, Ford's awareness of Canada and Canadian problems probably is more acute than most, although he has not been active in recent years in Canada-U.S. relations.

His support of Nixon has been especially noticeable in foreign and defence policies.

A steadfast "hawk" long after many of his colleagues and constituents had wearied of the Vietnam war, Ford still retained the respect of most members of Congress and enough of the voters' loyalty to be re-elected easily every two years.

Born in Omaha, Neb., Ford lived most of his early life in Grand Rapids, western Michigan.

An outstanding football player at Michigan University, he got a law degree from Yale where he also was assistant coach and returned to Grand Rapids to practise law after a bemedalled wartime experience in the navy.

Although some of his stands have outraged the party's more liberal members — he led an unsuccessful move to impeach Supreme Court Justice William Douglas in 1970 and has promoted an anti-busing amendment ot the Constitution — he has still managed to pull party members together on many crucial votes.

While his confirmation by Congress is likely to be an easy task, Ford is sure to face searching inquiries about his past to ensure that the U.S. doesn't get another possible political scandal on its hands.

Within minutes of Nixon's announcement, newspaper files showed some potential trouble for Ford. In the 1970 campaign he failed to report to Congress $11,500 in contributions.

Ford said at the time he was within the law in his handling of the money but he is certain to face close questioning about the matter.

the weather

The rain was heavy at times overnight in Vancouver and Victoria areas with a fall of ½ an inch during the night at Vancouver airport, bringing the total to about one inch since Friday morning. The weak Pacific disturbance causing this heavier rain is now moving inland across the south coast and will give showers to the southern interior today with some snow on the higher mountain passes of the Kootenays.

B.C. lies in the path of a strong flow of cool moist Pacific air which will keep all areas of the province cloudy and cool. Showers are expected in coastal areas with a few showers spilling over into the interior. However, a series of weak disturbances caught in this strong westerly flow will move across southern B.C. and each system will be accompanied by an area of heavier rain.

Bird Books Can Mislead Unwary

harold hosford

If you're like me, bird identification can sometimes give you all kinds of headaches. Not so much those brightly-colored birds but the drab greyish or brownish jobs. Some gulls and many shorebirds fall into this category.

And the bird books aren't really that much help. They either give you a colored photograph or painting of the bird, in full nuptial plumage, or a long involved description, neither of which tells the whole story.

First, you don't always see birds in their full regalia. They're often moulting from one plumage into another, or in some bewildering off-season garb when they can look like any one of half-a-dozen species.

There are also those individuals which just never seem to fit. They don't look quite like the book says they're supposed to.

And last, but by no means least, one man's black might be another man's brown, making word descriptions at best confusing.

But the book can lead us astray in another way.

In an overcautious attempt to point out the similarities between species, it often leaves the reader with the feeling that some species just cannot be identified in the field.

While this may be true at times, the book often leaves this impression without reason. Song and Lincoln's sparrows are a good example. By the book description they're almost too much alike. In the field they're easy to separate — once you get to know them.

And that's the secret: getting to know them.

Just last weekend I ran into this problem with gulls and seabirds, those true ocean wanderers, some of which find their way to our coastal waters across thousands of miles of trackless ocean and which seldom come close enough to shore to be identified.

According to the book, many of these birds, in their brownish and greyish plumages, look a lot like gulls, particularly young gulls. This left me wondering if I'd know a seabird, such as a shearwater, if I ever saw one. Up to then, I hadn't.

The answer came aboard the Coho enroute to Port Angeles on Thanksgiving Day when several Sooty Shearwaters, on their way south to breeding grounds off the coast of Chile at the very tip of South America, were seen just after we passed the halfway mark in Juan de Fuca.

Instead of dark greyish-brown that looked like gulls, these shearwaters were in fact dark greyish-brown bearing little other resemblances to their more terrestrial brethren.

Their flight alone was distinctive enough to mark them for what they were.

Instead of the slow, meandering, seemingly purposeless flight so typical of gulls, the shearwaters — true to their name — raced over the water on stiffly-arched wings alternating a series of rapid beats with long low glides, almost touching the water.

The book tells us this but sometimes we're too hung-up on what a bird looks like that we forget that what it is doing will often help identify it.

OTTAWA SET TO EXTEND COST-SHARING PROGRAM

OTTAWA (CP) — Pressed by the provinces, federal Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde committed his government Friday to a continuation of cost-sharing in some Canada Assistance Plan programs that have recently been made universal.

Lalonde said at the end of a two-day welfare ministers' meeting that he will try to amend the plan so the federal government will pay 50 per cent of assistance costs for persons who need government aid even through provinces extend programs to all residents.

Under present arrangements, when a program is widened the federal government stops paying half the costs. In most cases the practice has been that means tests were required before aid was given.

Once approved, the new arrangement could apply to such plans as day-care, nursing home care, denticare for children and pharmacare.

Lalonde had been pressed especially by Manitoba and British Columbia for the change because provinces have to bear full costs once needs tests are dropped.

Provinces that opt for universal coverage for their citizens should not be penalized financially because of their decisions, Lalonde said.

He added that the federal commitment to pay half of costs of needs persons should not be more expensive than if the provinces had not made their programs universal.

Manitoba minister Rene Toupin said since his government had introduced a universal nursing home care program in July, the provincial government had to pay out about $6 millon that would have been paid previously by the federal government.

Manitoba had received the full backing of the other provinces in their efforts to ensure federal participation, he added.

But until Lalonde made his announcement, the federal government had not made any commitment to share costs.

Welfare ministers left the conference — the second since the federal government proposed a complete overhaul of social security programs — apparently pleased with progress that has been made. A third meeting is scheduled for February.

B.C. minister Norman Levi said the Canada Assistance Plan now had a higher priority than before. He had made a special effort to have the plan ranked higher on welfare conference agendas.

Newfoundland's Ank Murphy said the poorer provinces have been having a hard time with Canada Assistance Plan programs but expressed optimism about the welfare program overhaul.

He praised Lalonde as "a very human man. He's done a tremendous job."

Lalonde said he was happy with the progress made. "We've passed the stage of making speeches and now we're having good hard-working sessions."

But Lalonde said there is still a lot of work to do in the suggested two-year review of welfare programs. There were many technical points to resolve and Lalonde said he would be happy if the April, 1975, deadline for review was met.

Code Not Full Answer —Deputy Minister

VANCOUVER (CP) — The proposed British Columbia labor code is designed to reduce labor-management strife but is not the final solution, deputy B.C. labor minister Jim Matkin said Friday.

He told a meeting of the Construction Labor Relations Association what will also be needed is a "more significant change in the attitude of the people in labor, management and the government."

He suggested that people become less doctrinaire and more practicial in their outlook.

Matkin said the principle of the legislation in regard to collective bargaining is that labor and management will have the opportunity to solve their problems.

End Housing Speculation, Gorst Urges

A provincial mortgage corporation which could provide low-interest mortgage loans to persons buying their own homes was proposed in the legislature Friday by a government backbencher.

Jim Gorst (NDP—Esquimalt) called for the government to take "profiteering and speculating" in the housing field away from the private sector so that ordinary citizens are able to afford their own homes.

Gorst suggested interest rates for mortgages through a government mortgage corporation could be set at 5 per cent, instead of the high rates being charged.

He said interest rates of 5.5 per cent are available to some people through the federal Veterans Land Act and should be available to everyone.

Gorst said the housing system operated by the private sector "works to the aggravation and expense of the private citizen" and said the government should intervene through a comprehensive land-lease program.

Part of the reason for the high cost of housing, Gorst said, is the high interest rates attached to mortgages. If land was leased to individuals by the government, the interest factor could be eliminated along with the speculators operating in the business.

Gorst also attacked 40-year mortgages, saying they may allow an individual to pay lower monthly payments, but result in final house costs which "stagger the mind."

He gave the example of a house bought for $40,000 on a 40-year mortgage which eventually would cost the buyer $96,000 once interest has been paid.

Gorst also called for the government to "secure" the land and buildings around the general vicinity of the Legislative Buildings in James Bay so that it does not end up as a dense, high-rise development similar to Vancouver's West End.

Gorst's remarks came during consideration of legislation introduced last week by the government which formally establishes a ministry of housing.

In opening debate on the principle of the Department of Housing Act, Lorne Nicolson, who will become the minister of the department, said the government hopes to cooperate fully with other levels of government to ensure that adequate units of housing will be available to families which need it.

He said if the government doesn't move swiftly in the housing field, only the rich will be able to afford their own homes.

Mortgages as Tax Deduction

Rosemary Brown (NDP—Vancouver-Burrard) said people should get away from the concept of owning property and housing.

Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) said the government should allow individuals to deduct interest on mortgage payments from their taxable incomes.

Peter Rolston (NDP—Dewdney) urged a $50 yearly rebate on rents for the disabled.

Allan Williams (L—West Vancouver-Howe Sound) said the legislature was entitled to more positive information from Nicolson on what he intends to do.

"I have not seen one positive step by this minister to provide one new housing unit," Williams said.

He argued that the problem is simply one of a shortage of housing, that the minister has been given tremendous amounts of money, and that action should be taken immediately.

He admitted the federal Liberal government is to blame for housing problems today and urged the minister not to make the same mistakes.

If the minister tells the house what his first step will be to provide housing "we'll vote for second reading today," Williams said.

When Roy Cummings (NDP—Vancouver-Little Mountain) then moved to adjourn debate on the bill, Williams shouted, "See, he hasn't got any answers."

Kalmbach Ordered Work

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon's architect, his former personal lawyer and former domestic adviser all requested government work on Nixon's San Clemente, Calif., estate, a house subcommittee has been told.

John F. Galuardi, deputy commissioner of the general services administration, testified Friday former Nixon lawyer Herbert Kalmbach and the president's personal architect, Harold Lynch, ordered work done on the home and surrounding grounds and sent the bills to the administration.

The government activities subcommittee, which completed its third day of hearings on some $10.1 million in expenditures made on Nixon's private residences, also released a memo from John D. Ehrlichman requesting the government administration maintain the president's swimming pool and grounds.

C-Z Contract Ended

The government-owned Ocean Falls Corp. has ended its newsprint sales contract with Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd., Resources Minister Bob Williams said Friday.

A new agreement with Gottesman-Central National Organization of New York will take effect Jan. 1, following 90-day termination notice given to Crown Zellerbach Oct. 1.

Gottesman-Central president Ira D. Wallach was recently appointed to the board of directors of Canadian Cellulose Co. Ltd., the government-controlled firm which took over the operations of Columbia Cellulose Co. Ltd.

Wallach said Friday there was no connection between his CanCel directorship and the new contract.

Crown Zellerbach had an agreement to the end of 1975 to sell newsprint from Ocean Falls, which it previously owned and operated, and to provide logs for the groundwood mill and chemical pulp for the newsprint mix. It will continue in its supply role.

Williams said the new agreement would increase Ocean Falls' revenue, which has a rated capacity of about 100,000 tons a year from two old newsprint machines.

He declined to outline the agreement's terms but said the prices included would reflect the rising market.

He said no Canadian sales organization could provide an agreement "as satisfactory or beneficial."

Crutches Rather Than Cures

Conditions being as they are, it is logical for the federal and provincial governments to plan a pensions scheme whose payments to beneficiaries will escalate along with the annual inflation index. When wages and salaries are keyed to a depreciating dollar, and inflation is accepted as an integral ingredient of our economy, it is both economically and morally unjustified to condemn the pensioned portion of the population to a gradually deteriorating slide into poverty — if pension recipients should live so long.

The proposed program to keep Canada Pension Plan payments in step with inflation carries added justification from the fact that it is a contributory scheme. Without annual adjustments the pensioner is repaid in dollars worth much less than the dollars which he contributed to the pension fund. The same argument may be made for payment of the interest and principal of government bonds in dollars of sufficient amount to equal the purchasing value of those which the investor originally lent. As it is, the latter receives his money back in depreciated dollars which are further emaciated by the tax which must be paid on the revenue portion.

But that aspect opens up a whole new financing problem, part of which is already answered by the higher rates of interest which are being asked by investors who seek to maintain at least their principal in a healthy condition. There is little doubt that the government action will in time be copied by other pension and annuity schemes, whether private or otherwise.

The irony of the situation, of course, is that adjusted pension payments, like escalated wages and salaries, themselves contribute to the inflationary spiral by adding greater spending power to the economy. The cause-and-effect merry-go-round is complete.

What the new adjustable pension plan illustrates is the federal government's conclusion that inflation is not something that can be terminated, but something which must be lived with. Consequently pensions, wages and similar revenues on which citizens are dependent — particularly in the lower brackets — must go along with the tide.

Because no better answer appears to be available, the authorities are issuing crutches, rather than cures, for the malady that afflicts our economy. Where it will all end is another question. Where we are going is a problem that has for the time being been relegated to second place. We appear to be concerned only with how quickly we will get there.

They Didn't Come-By-Chance

They had a wonderful time in Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, the other day. The Queen Elizabeth II arrived with all these American oil company presidents and British bankers to open a new $200-million refinery. The Venezuelan oil refined at the shiny new installation will go directly to the United States where it will undoubtedly fuel American industry which exports manufactured things to Canada.

Why was Canadian land chosen to host such a magnificent project of Anglo-American financial cooperation? Come to think of it, why did they choose Come-By-Chance? That's easy to answer. Newfoundland's Premier Frank Moores formally signed an agreement whereby the Newfoundland government guarantees $78.5 million of the refinery's construction costs. And if that wasn't enough, Ottawa kicked in another $20 million for a tanker wharf. That adds up to almost $100 million which two levels of Canadian government paid to attract a foreign enterprise which will process foreign oil for a foreign market.

A few Come-By-Chance locals will get jobs as security guards and laborers and the rest of the returns will go elsewhere. If an oil spill occurs in the area it may be a little hard on the fishing industry but the federal or provincial government will have a chance to hire more locals to clean up the mess.

British Columbia's former Social Credit government negotiated a similar deal when it built the Roberts Bank port facility. A foreign firm digs B.C. coal and sells it to another foreign country, paying a nominal royalty to the provincial government, and providing only a handful of jobs for Canadians.

The projects are legitimate and the foreign entrepreneurs cannot be criticized for their enterprise and willingness to invest. The galling part is that someone else does the job instead of Canada — and reaps the main rewards. We seem to provide merely an expensive frame for the picture. Come-By-Chance seems to be another instance in which Canada holds the ladder — and pays for the privilege.

A Tribute to the Carriers

Many millions of dollars are invested in the process of bringing newspapers to readers. There are leased wires that span the globe, bureaus and correspondents in foreign lands, modern publishing plants equipped with the latest marvels of teletypes, wire-photo machines, electronic engraving processes, speedy presses and other costly fixings. Back of the equipment are hundreds of trained reporters, printers, tradesmen, technicians and others who all contribute to putting out the daily newspaper.

Yet this vast, world-wide array of wealth and talent all depends on one additional link in the chain of bringing the news to subscribers. That link is the young boy or girl on a bicycle who delivers the newspaper to each doorstep.

Today, the daily newspapers of North America salute the young businessmen and businesswomen who form so important a part of the whole industry. It is International Newspaper Carrier Day, a tribute to young folk who are getting valuable training in business conduct, in handling accounts, in meeting the public, in assuming responsibility for a service to others. It is a day when these potential future business leaders are officially recognized for the good job they do. They carry the news now — they will make it tomorrow.

A Revolution With No End

PEKING — A journalist is fated to follow the advice given by a Shanghai friend to Teilhard de Chardin: "Write about China before you have been there too long; later you would break your pen."

No ill-prepared Westerner, lacking language, background, cultural roots and a comparable tradition of historical grandeur and national suffering, can hope to approach with any understanding the immensity of this land, its heritage, its aspirations. Yet this very impossibility is thrust upon a reporter.

On Monday week the Mao Tse-tung regime celebrated its 24th anniversary as sovereign of the oldest, largest nation-state. October was the birthday of the Chinese Revolution, the most important consequence of World War II, just as the Russian Revolution was the major result of World War I.

Civil Conflict

Each was Marxist, violent, and triumphant only after a bloody civil conflict and successive ideological purges. Each also chose a different road. China based itself as firmly on the dreams and requirements of the agricultural peasantry as Russia sustained the aspirations of industrial workers.

The discord that has erupted between these two great revolutionary powers over their own differing dreams, their rivalry as neighbors and as international forces, has become perhaps the most significant fact of this century's latter half.

Paradoxically, the primordial significance of the new China is the continuum of its thrust for change combined with the durability of its leaders. Chairman Mao and his chief lieutenant, Chou En-lai, took the helm after more than two decades of constant struggle.

Mao, at 80, with Chou at 75 still at his right hand, remain today in charge of this fascinating country's destiny. It is as if Lenin, the first brilliantly successful Marxist practitioner, had still been governing the Soviet Union in 1941 when it was invaded by Nazi Germany.

When Chairman Mao, almost a quarter century ago, assumed control of China, it was in far tighter straits than the Russia relinquished by defeated Czars. China had no unity; it was a land of clans and warlords. The ideology bequeathed by Sun Yat-sen's 1911 uprising was disparate and confused.

In 1949 this was a realm of famine, beggars, alternating floods and droughts, typhus, plague and above all humiliated, ruined peasants, saddled with the corruption of a disintegrating feudal system, misery, servitude and foreign domination.

CHAIRMAN MAO
. . . there must be many

The Maoist revolution destroyed this leaden heritage and replaced it with nationhood, dignity and pride. Even a swift glimpse affirms the wisdom of Teilhard de Chardin's friend. One can write this about China without breaking one's pen.

When Maoism assumed charge China was poorer than Pakistan, India or Indonesia, with a per capita food ratio one-fifth of France's and an average longevity less than half America's. Yet today this is a vibrant power, struggling slowly but successfully to create a better life. Its citizens are for the first time adequately clothed and fed, proud of their international status, confident of their security, overwhelmingly literate and healthy.

Like all mass upheavals, these achievements cost a heavy price in blood and suffering. But Maoist China has resolutely followed its own road, rethinking the economic, mental and political organization of the largest country on earth without copying either the fat-dripping West or dogmatic Russia.

As a result China is forging its leadership of the underdeveloped third world ignoring both superpower blocs, a nation still mounted on bicycles but initiated into secrets of the atomic-missile age.

Mao's two big innovations were the decision to base China's society on peasants, rather than technicians, workers or traditional intellectuals, and acceptance of a need for permanent revolution, renewing itself by an irregular pulse.

Radical Thesis

The latter is a most radical thesis, transcending Thomas Jefferson's untested belief that the tree of revolution must from time to time refresh itself with the blood of tyrants. Chairman Mao sees that victorious revolutions create their own favored, governing elite, what the Yugoslav, Milovan Djilas called the new class.

Therefore Mao has determined that whenever necessary, each successive new class must be uprooted and discarded. As he told an Albanian delegation six years ago: "The building of socialism cannot be accomplished in one, two, three or four cultural revolutions. There must be many others."

China this week is celebrating a mid-stream hiatus along an almost endless do-it-yourself revolution, conscious that ceaseless movement carries within it the risk of ceaseless instability, but also conscious that this is the price of progress on a scale the world has not hitherto known.

CHARLES BARTLETT

Chile's Up-Tight Generals

WASHINGTON — The political naivete of the generals who now run Chile is showing itself in their determination to make irreversible their rejection of Marxism.

It was the boast of Communist boss Luis Corvalan after the 1970 election that President-elect Allende would make the trend to Communism irreversible in Chile. It was a bad mistake then for one group to talk of shackling the future options of a nation with proud democratic traditions. It can be a worse mistake now.

The new Chilean rulers are law-and-order generals with little grounding in public administration. They are reluctant intruders upon a stage which they were content to leave to the politicians for 42 years. They are in politics because they believe their throats would be cut if they stayed out of politics. They are in an insecure state of mind, so the instinct to strike at their enemies is natural.

Created Chaos

But a purge of the left in this nation which gave 44 per cent of its vote to Allende is unrealistic. The Communists and Socialists created chaos in Chile, but they were ousted before they took leave of constitutional channels. So they have kept their legitimacy, and their extermination by the generals will prolong the ordeal of Chile's recovery.

The experience in Indonesia, where the streams ran red with Communist blood after the overthrow of President Sukarno, raises a warning for the junta. Behind the bustle of Indonesian progress, thoughtful men watch apprehensively for an emergence of the bitterness bred in the post-Sukarno bloodbath. That purge left a residue of mistrust which will remain an unsettling political factor for many years to come.

The Chilean generals clearly see the need for healing steps. They have promised the poor they will help them keep the income gains they secured from the Allende era. Their wives are donating jewelry to buy food for the poor. One new minister actually made a tour of slum areas in Santiago. They are trying to build a base of popularity within the hard core of the late President's support.

They are also trying to fracture the instinct to idealize the late President by showing that the concern which he and his ministers felt for the poor was combined with strenuous efforts to gratify their own tastes for a rich style of life. These were truly "limousine Leninists," and the exposure of their extravagances is one means by which the generals hope to head off the formation of a "cult of Allende."

But the junta needs most of all to keep the support of the middle classes which suffered most from Allende's economic fantasies. Badly squeezed in Communist attempts to nationalize the economy by bankrupting private businesses, middle class individualists welcomed the coup, but they will resist a decimation of the political system and a repression of their personal liberties.

Burning Books

Burning books in the streets is an act of rigidity which has raised warning signals. The resignation of the popular rector of the university, Edgardo Boeninger, is another bad signal because Boeninger secured his post after a heated campaign against an Allende candidate. There is so far little show of concern for the sentiments of respected Christian Democrats like Eduardo Frei. The generals behave as if they had abolished politicians along with the political parties.

This posture puts huge pressure on the junta to succeed in restoring the country's economic health. Political gaffes can be compensated by economic successes because the country needs food, capital and foreign reserves. These are all areas in which the United States can be helpful.

After supplying more than $1 billion in the 1960s to keep Chile from going Communist, the United States will not stint now in assisting the return from Communism. But the help ought to be conditioned on the generals' willingness to pursue a more limber style of leadership.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

By Freeman King

Go out along the Beaver Lake Road to where the old filter tanks were. This area has been made into a good parking lot.

Now go for a walk around the west side of Beaver Lake and see the many interesting features.

The lake itself is very low and the shore line has changed. Now you can see broken bushes, old sunken logs and rocks that have not been exposed for many years. Some of the rocky outcrops are fascinating to see. They have been worn off by the ice, folded, and then turned up on their edges by the upheaval of the land.

As you walk along the trail there are many other things to note. The Osier dogwood shrub predominates and there is a lot of Indian plum. Each bush seems to have a different shape and color of leaf.

We noted quite a few Saskatoon bushes, but this particular species has hardly any fruit.

Since the recent rains we noticed that the licorice ferns have become bright green.

Along the way you can spot the bright yellow leaves of the cottonwood which have fallen to the ground. Examine one of these leaves and see how fascinating it is, with its clean outstanding veins which give it the strength to withstand heavy winds.

Some of the small islands that now jut out into the lake looked a lot different when the lake was at its normal level. Now the rocks are exposed and the few shrubs growing on them look badly out of place, like a poorly scissored brush-cut hairdo.

Along some of the very small bays green algae have accumulated until they are in thick mats. These will soon die off as the weather gets colder.

No doubt this trend is reflected in many of our lakes owing to a dry summer and lack of rain.

There are a few things to mar this beautiful setting, including fires which thoughtless people have set at the roots of Douglas firs where pitch and resin collect. In several places where fire has ringed the trees, the firs have died. Perhaps, in a short while, the burned trees will become homes for many kinds of insects which in turn will make feeding places for the woodpeckers and a place for the bracket fungi to grow.

Lesson of History

The new labor legislation will give added power and growth to the labor unions in B.C. I have just returned from a five-week stay in Great Britain and it was appalling to observe the great power of the second government in Britain, the non-elected T.U.C. Prices are controlled. Profits are controlled, but the unofficial government of Britain, the T.U.C., stubbornly refused (during my stay) to accept the elected government's wage increase policy, thus risking serious economic damage to a Britain just entering into the stern dicipline of a realistic Common Market.

Those who do not learn from history are condemned to repeat the mistakes of past history. It would be ironic if Mr. Barrett found his road to Utopia barred not by free enterprise but by the Frankenstein Monster he has nourished and strengthened. This is occurring in England now where the T.U.C. is blocking the efforts of the elected government to control inflation. In Russia the government met the challenge by shooting the leaders and abolishing the unions.—M. P. Paine, 3620 Quadra St.

The Mideast Haunted by Ghosts

By WILLIAM R. POLK

(Polk is professor of Middle Eastern history at the University of Chicago and a former member of the U.S. State Department.)

As the tragic and bitter events of the Middle East unfold, two questions demand careful analysis: why did the war break out, and is it possible to build a secure peace?

The first question is simple to put but the answer, to be true, must be complex. I suggest that it must be answered on three levels. First, the psychological; second, the diplomatic and strategic, and third, the immediate cause or the "trigger" which caused the outbreak of fighting at this time.

Both the Arabs and the Israelis are haunted by ghosts of the past. For each these ghosts are real, and their presence is ever felt. One cannot hope to understand the contemporary Middle East without being sensitive to them.

Holocaust Recalled

In the back of the mind of every Israeli today is the spectre of the "Holocaust." The destruction of the European Jewish community is regarded not only as an act of savage genocide by the Nazis, but weak acquiescence by many European Jews.

Israelis today are determined not only never again to expose themselves to persecution by others, but to be strong, self-reliant and assertive. Israel is seen as the last redoubt from which there can be no retreat.

Consequently, Israelis recoil in anger from suggestions for a settlement which they believe would weaken them, put them in an inferior bargaining position or ostracize them. This is the underlying political reality with which any Israeli, Arab or neutral government must reckon.

The Arabs are haunted by their ghost too. It does not have the drama of the holocaust, but it is a ghost shared by the poor, underdeveloped two-thirds of the world's population. It is the ghost of humiliation and weakness. Heirs to a proud civilization, contemporary Arabs are the sons and grandsons of those who lived under imperialism and colonialism. The last British troops evacuated Egypt, after 66 years, in 1956 — just a few months before they, the French and the Israelis invaded Egypt in the Suez crisis.

Egypt Fell Behind

During the long British occupation, Egypt, already poor and backward, fell relatively further behind the rich nations. Its population grew rapidly, and its resources remained almost static. Little was done with education, and when Nasser made his coup d'etat in 1952, the legacy of poverty, ignorance and disease was awesome.

This sense of backwardness, humiliation and memory of distant grandeur is a poisonous political brew. We have watched its effects in Africa, Asia, Latin America and in the U.S. Few Arab governments are free of its effects.

One effect is extreme sensitivity to questions of honor and dignity. This is not an "oriental" attribute — it has been a central issue of French politics since Vichy. Defeat is always a bitter draught, but when combined with the legacy of weakness and humiliation, it becomes too much to accept.

Refusal to accept the realtiy of defeat is the central thread of Arab politics since 1949. Among other people — the British in 1940, the Russians in 1942, the Free French — we regard refusal to admit defeat as heroic. But in the Middle East most Americans have seen it as unrealistic, dangerous and, frequently, ludicrous. It remains a fact, however, that no Arab government has been strong enough to admit defeat, and those Arab leaders who would like to end the war risk being called Quislings.

The strategic and diplomatic issues have been clarified in the last six months. On their side, the Israelis found the cease-fire relatively comfortable and very profitable. Guerrilla warfare and terrorism had been eliminated in the occupied territories; Arabs from Gaza and the West Bank poured into Israel daily to perform the chores, like the Turks in West Germany and the Pakistanis in England, that Israelis preferred not to do; tourism was increasing; massive American private and governmental support was forthcoming; the economy was not only booming, with a growth rate comparable to Japan's, but Israel was rapidly becoming self-sufficient even in armaments.

Moreover, there were increasing signs that the Soviet Union was interested in at least discussing better relations, and although the United Nations constantly passed resolutions demanding that Israel give up the territories that it conquered, the U.N. did nothing about it.

From that position, it was difficult to imagine that negotiations would bring an improvement. Every one of the plans put forward hinged on Israel's giving up something. The only difference between them was how much.

Moreover, almost any conceivable peace in which Israel gains territory — as all Israelis, hawks and doves alike demand — will presumably bring more Arab citizens to Israel. This is a fundamental dilemma. The Zionists never foresaw, nor are most Israelis today in favor of, a bi-national state.

The early Zionists saw Israel as an exclusively Jewish state; most today are prepared to tolerate, even to enjoy, an Arab minority, but the state is clearly not of them, by them or for them. Given the conception of the state, it would be far more difficult to integrate Arabs than it has been to integrate Blacks or Indians in America.

Terms Were Tough

The reaction of Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir's government was to set the price of peace very high. This included four elements: "reconciliation" by the Arabs to an independent Israel, face-to-face negotiations, open boundaries (which apparently means free economic competition) and the continuation of Israeli military superiority. Israeli leaders with whom I spoke last summer openly conceded that the Arabs could not accept these terms.

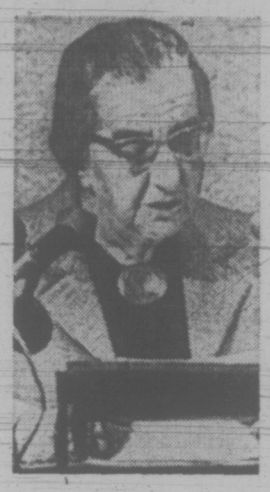
By the spring of 1973 the Egyptians were faced with three painful possible courses of action.

First, maintenance of the status quo. Egypt was becoming increasingly shabby as its 800,000-man army consumed about 30 cents of every dollar the country earned. The population, now more than 34 million, is increasing at 2½ per cent yearly. Although not admitted, the Aswan high dam has been a disastrous mistake. The Suez Canal has remained closed, and Egypt has been forced to rely heavily on the good will of Libya, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

Moreover, President Sadat inherited the oversized shoes of the nationalist hero, President Nasser. Sadat has proven skilful in thwarting moves against him, but he has found it difficult to explain why, despite a huge army equipped with more tanks than Germany had when it invaded Russia in 1941, Egypt had to tolerate Israeli occupation of 45,000 square miles of Egyptian territory, much of which is less than 100 miles from Cairo. It is reasonable to assume that the officer corps found this yet another cause of humiliation.

The second option was to admit the defeat, to surrender and make peace on Israeli terms. It is not widely known, but President Nasser tried to find a formula to negotiate after the war in 1967. Until the current outbreak of fighting, Sadat was probably not strong enough to entertain this possibility.

The third painful option was



MEIR

a "forward policy." This has two possible forms, diplomacy and war.

The Egyptians mounted a diplomatic offensive at the United Nations and through emissaries to a number of countries in the spring and summer of this year. They argued that since the United Nations had demanded an Israeli withdrawal, and Israel had refused to comply, the issue was no longer solely Arab-Israeli but now concerned the whole membership, indeed the continued existence of the United Nations. They attempted to draw a parallel between Italy's invasion of Ethiopia, a mortal blow to the League of Nations, and the current Middle Eastern-United Nations impasse.

The diplomatic offensive was a failure because of its very success. Egypt gathered the overwhelming support of the poor members of the United Nations, lukewarm sympathy from Europe, talk but no action from the Soviet Union and an American veto. Israel was unmoved.

That left the option of fighting. We are not privy to Egyptian thinking on these issues, but based on years of study and conversations last summer, it seems likely to me that while the decision may not have been made in precisely these terms, the Egyptian strategists may have thought along the following lines:

Israel has twice proven that pre-emptive military action is effective; perhaps it would be effective for the Egyptians. If the fighting could be prolonged, other Arab states, regardless of their rational analysis of the chances or their doctrinal antipathy to Egypt, would be forced to come to the aid of their Arab brothers. Even those that did not participate militarily would be constrained to use their diplomatic and economic pressures on Egypt's behalf.

If Egypt could seize and maintain control of the east bank of the Suez Canal, at minimum the canal might subsequently be reopened and so increase Egyptian revenues by $250 million or so yearly. If the army performed creditably, whether or not it won, it might be possible to enter into negotiations on terms which were at least not humiliating.

Lashed Out

Finally, Sadat, having lashed out militarily in the Arab national cause, could begin to fill the large shoes he had inherited and would cease to be threatened by the charge of cowardice or treason.

These considerations, it seems to me, form an essential background to an understanding of the present fighting in the Middle East.

The question "why now?" can probably be answered quickly.

The Egyptian diplomatic offensive had failed; Russia had withdrawn increasingly from its heavy intervention in Middle Eastern affairs, and Russian military equipment, particularly the more sophisticated and delicate items, was rapidly deteriorating. Israel was gaining in power and prestige vis-a-vis the Arabs. Finally, the persistent rumors and intelligence and diplomatic reports of Israeli-Soviet contacts became precise and detailed about three weeks ago.

Diplomatic rumors, whether true or not, indicated that Israel and the Soviet Union were moving close to an exchange of ambassadors. My hunch is that this may have been the final straw for the Egyptians. It may have convinced them that soon they would be frozen out of the councils of the great powers, increasingly weak, increasingly poor, increasingly numerous. In these circumstances the public mood would turn increasingly bitter against an apparently inept, cowardly or traitorous government.

If true, this suggests that the war was a desperate move, almost a throw of the dice, when all else had failed and little could be hoped.

Unending War?

Must we look forward to another non-peace, another enormous waste of human resources on armaments, another period of increased population, uncured disease, unremedied backwardness? Then, perhaps, an even more bitter and costly war?

The answer is probably yes unless we can seize upon the fluidity of the crisis, analyze its elements and assist the most responsible and constructive among the belligerents and their friends to build something better.

Ironically, the fighting, if it can be stopped before the damage is too great or before the Arabs again are humiliated, may have removed one of the obstacles to the successful negotiation of peace. It would be far easier for Sadat today to negotiate than it would have been a month ago, or a year ago. A week from now the opportunity may have slipped away. It would be tragic if the Egyptians, the Israelis and the world community did not seize it.

The Spying Computer Public Enemy No. 1?

THE PROVINCE
An Editorial

Ever since HAL the computer horrified the film-going public in "2001" the computer has been viewed with increasing alarm. Over the past few weeks at least some of it has been justified. The computer, it seems, may not be just a private peeve of fanatical groups, but a real public enemy.

This was pointed out painfully by the recent "U.S. invasion of Quebec" scare, which later proved false. However, some facts it brought to light — the exchange of information between the American CIA and the RCMP — were true. Apparently the U.S. agency has a full time representative at RCMP headquarters with access to files of Canadian information. Since many of these files are of a political nature, the implications are clear. In case of a true invasion, the "enemy" would need no spies. The computer was there before them. It stores much of the information so exchanged.

International invasion of individual rights may come as no surprise to the Science Council of Canada, whose 21st report, Strategies of Development for the Canadian Computer Industry raised the first alarm about American computer control, some weeks ago.

The study casts dark shadows on the future of Canadian privacy under American operated computer systems. The government, says the council, should support Canadian computer equipment firms specializing in low-budget mini computers and equipment that could connect customers with larger computers. It also recommends government grants to Canadians buying into American-controlled computer firms; and a policy of preventing "foreign takeovers" of Canadian-owned firms.

All very reasonable, not to mention encouraging to the Canadian computer industry. But, stresses the Science Council, the threat of foreign ownership may be to private individuals as well as large corporations. The villain of the piece is the service bureau, a sector of the industry that owns computers and sells their services to government and industry at will.

According to Dr. Leon Katz, chairman of the Science Council's committee on computer applications and technology, it is imperative that the knowledge stored and tabulated by service bureaus stay in Canadian hands. IBM Canada, an American owned company, has the largest network of computer service bureaus in Canada, as well as owning 63 per cent of the value of all hardware installed in the country. It is possible that the medical records, credit ratings and criminal records of Canadians may now be stored in a data centre in the United States — out of reach of Canadian law.

There is no check on the flow of data about Canadians. Our credit ratings, medical histories, travel arrangements and financial positions are duly noted in the U.S., to say nothing of political and criminal data. Indeed, other countries may well have readier access to Canadian information than Canadians have themselves.

With the predicted spread of computer services, the service bureau will have access to virtually all homes and offices. The invasion of privacy issue is one that concerns us nationally as well as internationally. Indeed, if invasion is the issue, we might just as well surrender: we have already been taken over from within.

Whatever our views of foreign ownership of computer data companies, we have no consolidated views on the use or abuse of data within Canadian borders. Unlike Britain, where a professional computer society exists, we have no governing body with a rigid code of ethics. The industry in Canada is in the developing stage in the moral and legal as well as the economic sense.

Despite a 1972 joint study by the departments of justice and communications, concluding that computers do not constitute a "social crisis," the fact remains that our lives are constantly tabulated by external forces. "The individual has a basic and continuing interest in not having information about him communicated to other parties without his knowledge and contrary to his will," the study said.

But from the first record of birth to the death register, the individual is becoming a great trough of information drained bit by bit into the eager mouths of computers. Nationalistic indignation arises at the thought that "transformative" technology, capable of bringing about changes in human thought and action, should be in the hands of a foreign country.

"Do we want to be controlled by Americans?" we ask in horror. But the fundamental question is: "Do we want to be controlled by anyone?" At the present time in Canada, there is little or no protection for the citizen against possible abuse of computer information.

Medical, legal, employment and credit records could conceivably be massed by computer, with a completely misleading result. Credit files are under no clear control — there is no Canadian equivalent of the U.S. federal Fair Credit Reporting act. In fact, the Canadian government does not regulate its own data-gathering processes. Statutes authorize schemes (such as welfare plans) where collection of information about individuals is vital to operation. And, as the privacy report points out, ". . . rules governing the occasions when and the conditions under which personal information may be disseminated within the public service do not appear to be fully adequate."

Furthermore, computers are not obliged to update their information and inaccurate compilations of material could result from unrevised records. People can't correct files to which they seldom have access.

Before we begin to search for solutions to international data flow problems, we should look to our own. The privacy study summed it up clearly: "Attention first must be given to clarifying and to establishing, where necessary, these rights in Canadian law." In other words, before tidying up the neighbor's, we should be setting our own house in order.

Elegance Returns and One Man's Happy

By JOHN CROSBY
London Observer

The Yale alumni magazine has an article about "the rising tide of elegance" on the Yale campus in this year 1973. The last time I was in the United States was in 1970, and that was the year of the campus riots, campus sit-downs, the winter of campus discontent. There were pictures in the papers of Yale students having a sit-down — disheveled, bearded, longhaired, blue-jeaned, sandaled, fierce-eyed, sullen — like students everywhere in that year of the Kent State massacre.

In 1973, Eddie Wittstein, the 86-year-old bandleader who played at Yale proms for 52 years until they abolished them in 1970, is back playing at Yale dances. He's played at three this year, including two formal affairs — dinner jackets on the men, long dresses on the girls. At one of the dances, students specifically asked that rock music not be played.

This follows a Washington Post article that sweet music is making a nationwide return in the United States. Couples are dancing cheek to cheek again, boys and girls dancing in each other's arms. This implies that someone — presumably the girl — is following her partner. Oh, women's lib where are you?

These two seeming bits of triviality are big news, important news. A war has ended (America's longest and most agonizing), and the end of all long wars, the Napoleonic, The First World War, The Second World War, have been followed by periods of elegance and gaiety.

For far too long, youth everywhere has been impoverished of anything resembling youthfulness. For years, youth hasn't even looked young. Nineteen-year-olds have looked haggard and worn out. That was the going until now. Heaven rest us, freshness and charm are on the way back.

As Eddie Wittstein says in the Yale magazine: "These kids are fed up. They realize it's time for something cleaner, sweeter and nicer." My goodness, it was only yesterday all those words were obscenities. I mean true obscenities in the sense that you wouldn't dream of using them in mixed company. What one did was simply riddle his phrases with four-letter words — you know, the more socially acceptable ones.

I'm stuck too by the idea that kids are fed up. That was exactly what the kids were who turned against the sweetness and light of the 1950s — and a very healthy revolt it was in its time. I am reminded of Edmund Leach's words: "All true creativity must start out as a challenge to accepted morality." When blue jeans and rock music and general oafishness are the norm, what better way to revolt than to dress like grandfather, play his music and make a studied and deliberate return to elegance.

What is ironic about all this is that a generation which attacked the mores and manners of its elders with almost unparalleled ferocity is itself being undermined in a much more subtle way: it is simply being ignored. It is being forgotten to death (to use Paddy Chayefsky's marvelous phrase).

I got an inkling this was on the way about a year ago when some of the editors of OZ, that underground organ of avant-garde youth, on a BBC program savagely derided some older editors of the English establishment press for being out of touch with modern realities and, above all, with youth.

Of course, you may say I'm reading too much into a "rising tide of elegance" at one American university, but I don't think so. Yale is a bellwether institution, and what's there today is likely to spread around the rest of the country. What spreads around the United States has a disconcerting habit of spreading worldwide. However, elegance seems to be in the air everywhere else, too.

On the streets of London, the girls are in long dresses and looking very chic. I have just riffled through the pages of Vogue. My goodness, crinolines! When did I last hear that word? White silk net edged in turquoise and chiffon (I'm only quoting here). Satins, brocades, red fox fur off the shoulder. (What happened to the ecologists?) Those cloche hats so reminiscent of the Twenties. Gold sequins, lame, gold chains — "the rich look." The rich look? It was not so long ago that looking rich was in itself a kind of obscenity. To be in fashion was to look poor.

The return to a softer, sweeter time is not just clothes. As I write this piece, the Second World War strains of Ella Fitzgerald's "A Tisket A Tasket" are being heard. We used to dance to that in New York before the war pulled the shutters down on merriment. It has a lilt, a joyousness and an innocence quite fresh and different from the heavy sexuality of rock. There also is a remake of F. Scott Fitzgerald's "The Great Gatsby."

Take a look at the list of plays in London's West End — "No, No, Nanette," a musical from the early Twenties; Noel Coward's "Private Lives," J. B. Priestley's "An Inspector Calls," Edna Ferber's "Showboat" and, heavens above, Somerset Maugham's "The Constant Wife." In all of them, elegance and style —the qualities in life which have been gone too long.

Is this a bad thing? I don't think so. I am tired of "Ah, woe!" as a philosophy of life. I am tired of being told that our lives are nightmares when quite clearly they aren't. I have always harbored the belief which Dostoevski expressed in his memoirs and which Tolstoy echoed in "War and Peace." Life itself is such a gift that every day of it, every breath you draw, you should thank God for. Anything less than joy of life is a desecration of it.

B.C. Artists Get Together But Omens Not Hopeful

audrey johnson

There is no wonder that the average businessman finds it difficult to accept artists as people in the same way he can accept fellow businessmen.

In the community of the business world there is a degree of solidarity, a clear-cut policy-making agreement possible that the community of artists does not seem able to summon.

The problem is not an inscrutable one. It arises from the introspective nature and powerful individuality of the genuinely creative person. It nevertheless makes difficulties as much for the artists as for the non-artists when dialogue is necessary.

For the best part of a year now — various sessions have been held across Canada with the objective of focussing government and general attention on the condition of the arts in Canada.

The artists are becoming vocal. They are becoming militant and it's about time.

But are they presenting a solid case — an unwavering direction along a united front.

Opportunity to find out and to score importantly for this province's artistic life comes next weekend when Arts Access, a province-wide conference on the arts, gets under way at Simon Fraser University.

It's the biggest thing of its kind in the cultural history of B.C. Co-ordinator Nint Baird, director of SFU's Centre for Communications and the Arts, expects about 800 participants from many areas of the province.

In addition the conference is being funded by the government and government representatives will attend with the undertaking to listen, to note and to consider any solid policy proposals that emerge from the meeting.

Arts Access will consume two days. The first part on Saturday will be an information session presenting statements concerning the present cultural situation in B.C. Seminar sessions during the morning and afternoon will be followed by a report-back session of considerable length.

Out of this it is hoped will come a mass resolution which will then be vetted over-night by a resolutions committee which will also consider and summarize earlier resolutions arising out of the dozens of briefs submitted ahead of the conference date.

These will then be submitted for discussion Sunday morning.

Guests at the conference may include representative of arts bodies from other provinces, National Film Board and Canada Council members.

Describing Arts Access as a once-in-a-lifetime chance, Vancouver critic Max Wyman concludes, "Those concerned simply have to make the most of it."

The chance that they will is not assured in the minds of observers who have been present at this year's preparatory conferences.

A Sunday session at Open Space a couple of weeks ago, and another last winter hosted by the UVic theatre department — both sponsored by Victoria Community Arts Council — left about the same impression:

There are many serious problems affecting the arts but the artists as a body are not articulate in presenting these problems or in outlining solutions.

Aside from the general agreement that more money should be forthcoming, discussion on other levels usually ends in the proponents becoming so involved with their own corner of the forest that they never emerge for a comprehensive survey of the whole landscape.

Nothing leads anywhere except back round to the starting point.

Further preparation for Arts Access is planned this weekend with a two-day session at Open Space at which the artists and the art-conscious can make their pitch via an oversized soapbox.

Last winter's UVic episode was a prelude to a regional conference in Calgary which was a preparation for Direction '73, a Canadian Conference of the Arts session which took place in Ottawa in April.

And that has all lead to Arts Access as far as the impact on B.C. is concerned.

B.C. Government representative at Direction '73 was Rosemary Brown.

Ms. Brown started off the B.C. workshop with a positive statement, including the phrase, "... we (the B.C. government) consider the arts an important and vital part of the fabric of our lives."

She also told the assembly that "we are committed to the principle that all artists should participate in decisions affecting the development of the cultural life of our province."

These statements naturally generated an immense amount of excitement and optimism among the B.C. contingent but the positive mood had weakened considerably by the time Ms. Brown had left the conference.

Frustrated by the lack of direction, the personal insularity of many of the speakers and general formlessness, she voiced a hope that she would never have to attend such a meeting again.

Ms. Brown was also disturbed because no one seemed to have any thought for the consumer. There had been no mention of a need for art in education, no comment at all on the need to make art available to everyone.

And yet, more and more the public is looking toward the arts to provide a greater measure of meaning and satisfaction in life.

Researchers are coming up with some arresting information in this connection. By now, for instance, it is pretty widely known that many more tickets are sold for arts events in Canada than for sports events.

After scientists, doctors and lawyers, musicians rank fourth in public esteem, a National Research Centre for the Arts survey tells us.

Almost three-quarters of those polled disagreed with the statement that symphony concerts are only for highbrows.

They also preferred live music to recordings, radio or television.

A great many people went on record as preferring to have a first-rate theatre and arts and crafts centre to a good sports stadium.

Witness the fact of Denver turning down the winter Olympics but voting $6 million for a concert hall complex. Or Hamilton, Ont., which has opened a splendid arts complex without having to resort to federal or provincial funds.

So the public wants the arts and the B.C. government is prepared to listen to both sides and to create policies that will benefit both.

Arts Access organizers have outlined four main areas for discussion and analysis at the conference. They are provincial arts funding, distribution of funds, the condition of the individual artist, and arts education and the responsibility of the government and the artists to the cultural environment.

According to Nint Baird the artists are genuinely intent to put their personal concerns aside for the greater good of all.

Let us indeed hope this can be achieved. If it is the conference will not only be an historic occasion, but an unparalleled one.

Bishop at St. Luke's

St. Luke's Anglican Church, Cedar Hill, will celebrate its 113th anniversary by holding a mission week beginning Sunday.

Rt. Rev. Douglas Walter Hambidge, Bishop of Caledonia, will lead the church during the week.

St. Luke's, one of the oldest churches on Vancouver Island, was founded in 1860, but the present church building was not erected until 1887.

The Bishop will speak at a dinner Wednesday and at a choral eucharist on St. Luke's Day, Thursday.

He will also close the mission week by preaching at several services Oct. 21.

'LAST TANGO IN PARIS'

It Says a Lot About Our Failures

By GEORGE OAKE

Last Tango in Paris is a danse macabre for the 20th century.

To borrow a phrase from Thomas Hardy, we see the century's corpse outleant in Paul (Marlon Brando) and Jeanne (Marie Schneider).

At 45 Paul has been a journalist, actor, revolutionary and bongo player. The Mid-West American boy who came up in the New Deal and went down in the Global Village.

Jeanne, at 20, is the liberated electric woman of floppy hat and knee-high boots that cuts along Sunset strip or the Rue de Ecole with equal aplomb. No commitments and lots of selfishness. Her emotions have been artfully arranged and manipulated by the big sell of the con society.

Paul follows Jeanne to Rue Jules Verne — an impish bit of symbolism on the part of Director Bernardo Bertolucci — where she asks to see an apartment for rent.

When she reaches the flat, lo and behold there's Paul all crunched up against one wall.

After a few minutes of desultory debate on who will rent the flat, Paul picks up Jeane and puts her against the wall in the literal and figurative sense.

To say they made love would be a misnomer, the action is direct and animal like.

Paul rents the flat and for the next three days they meet there without even knowing each other's names.

"We don't need names here; we're going to forget everything we know here," says Paul.

But the camera sees them in their other lives.

Paul's adulterous wife committed suicide the night before and he returns to the flophouse-hotel she owned and watches as an indifferent maid cleans up the bloody bathroom.

Jeanne meets her boyfriend, who has been commissioned to make a television film of her entitled Portrait of a Girl.

The juxtaposition of their lives is devastating. Paul has seen it all. The bloody bathroom is the denouement to a life of shattered illusions.

As a journalist and revolutionary he presumably chased the liberal humanism espoused by the century's thinkers that has been winked at by the time's political babbits.

Sitting beside his wife's body he says, "I'd do it too, but I don't know how," referring to her suicide.

Back in the apartment with Jeanne he tells her how as a boy he asked his father to carry out his milking chores so he could take a girl to a basketball game. His father refused, and later as he drove the girl to the game the cow dung on his shoes began to smell.

Jeanne isn't moved. Her life is an artifice of sensations. In her other life removed from the apartment, she decides to marry the boyfriend because it would make a good ending for his movie.

Marriage can be fixed like a car, says the boyfriend, and his film fiction becomes her reality.

He is fascinated by her colonial colonel father's exploits, but when she relates them to Paul he sneers, "What a steaming pile of bullshit."

Yet the cynical, seedy, shattered hulk that is Paul has not completely risen above the wasteland. For all his insights he is still hung up on old-fashioned male machismo and sexual prowess. Their sexual relationship is almost a purge. He demands total subservience as he takes revenge on her body, and his own.

Interestingly enough, when Bertolucci's masterpiece first appeared a year ago critics and public alike zeroed in on the sex.

The director must be laughing in his camera lens at the perfect irony.

Here is a magnificent, compassionate statement about the failure of the century's generations and many people can only debate whether the film is obscene or not.

The debate becomes part of the film's art, fulfilling its thesis that we are all lost in some trivial cartoon-playing on the windows of our skulls.

In this genre Paul takes Jeanne to a weird 1940s night-club where a tango contest is in progress. He tells her it is the kind of place he used to go as a young man to pick up a "bimbo" like her.

She looks around at the performers doing their ridiculous, ritualized dance and says, "This place is so pitiful."

Paul, it would seem, wants to go back to his innocent beginnings, his youthful dream-time, as it were.

But after the brutal realities of their apartment which is the seventies, the camera pans around the club showing the greased-down Lotharios and wooden women of his generation.

His youthful reality was as artificial as Jeanne's is now. It has all been a shuck, a vast human movie spliced together in a century's madness.

Paul hauls Jeanne out on the floor, dragging her around, laughing and drunk — the slovenly seventies among the aging mannequins dancing out obsolete rituals like grouse on a log.

The puffy harridan running the contest remonstrates with Paul and Jeanne: "But it is a contest, where does love fit in? Go to the movies to see love."

How true it is in the 1970s.

Jeanne, who can't take Paul's sordid reality anymore, leaves the club and runs for home, pursued by Paul. He forces his way into her apartment and she shoots him with her father's pistol.

He stumbles out to the balcony, and gazing across the slate roofs of Paris, carefully and deliberately removes some gum from his mouth and sticks it on the underside of the wrought iron balcony.

Death is common and trite and like Paul doesn't want to die with a mouthful of spearmint. It's like using an underarm deodorant before being executed. The scene is a stunning comment on our conditioning and modern triteness.

Fadeout comes as Jeanne, holding the gun, says she didn't even know his name ... he was a madman, he tried to rape me.

Preparing herself for the police, there is no sorrow, no passion. Her mind immediately turns to how she can save her own skin.

All that is left is the corpse. Western man has become a parody of himself, his art, ideals and philosophy. And the city of light is a fitting backdrop because it was from there the century's hope sprang full-flown.

Monet, Cezanne, Joyce and Sartre, to name a few, gave new ideas and hope to a jaded Europe stumbling through the soot of an industrial revolution, weighted down with stultifying Victorian morality.

Looking at Paul and Jeanne, it was all for nought.

Project Hope for Inmates Meets in Wilkinson Jail

Project Hope will hold its annual meeting Monday night —in Wilkinson Road jail.

The site is appropriate because the project is devoted to Wilkinson Road jail inmates and ex-inmates.

Project organizers hope the meeting will attract some of the people who have been helped by its workers since it started in March, 1972.

Project Hope provides an orientation and counselling centre for inmates released from the jail. It gives them moral and sometimes financial support while they're getting back on their feet again and finding a job.

It holds weekly meetings at the jail to help inmates get prepared for life on the outside.

And it runs a boarding house at 1029 North Park which acts as an activity centre for ex-inmates.

House managers Steve and Susan Durfee say they try to keep a lot of activity going at the house—pool, darts, euchre, ping pong.

The house is rented from the St. Vincent de Paul Society and was once a place for drunks, say the Durfees, but now they're "getting the word downtown to all the drunks that they're not welcome."

"The house just doesn't work with a bunch of drunk people in it," said Susan Durfee.

Project Hope has organized weekly handball, pottery and swimming sessions, "with plans for so much more," said Steve.

Giving the men something to do besides going to a bar is important, he said.

"What they do with their leisure time, that's the ball game."

All Project Hope members must be approved by the inmate members at one of the weekly meetings in the jail.

The project ran on a Local Initiatives Project grant till June and since then has been just scraping by, but the Durfee says the financial situation doesn't worry them much.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 21-year-old man was fined $175 in provincial court this morning and warned to stop taking drugs lest he "blow his brains apart."

The warning and fines were imposed by Judge Edmond St. Jorre on Christopher J. Chudzik, No. 3, 1325 Esquimalt, who pleaded guilty to possession of a restricted drug, MDA, commonly known as "speed" and to possession of marijuana.

The charges were laid early this morning after police saw the accused in the Yates Street carpark. He had MDA and about two ounces of marijuana.

"It's a serious matter ... he is going to blow his brains apart if he keeps taking that stuff," said St. Jorre, referring to the MDA.

"We seem to be getting more and more drug cases all the time," the judge said. "I don't see any drop."

He said it was a matter everyone would have to consider "for our own health."

"I know young people want to experiment ... investigate ... score and make judgments for themselves," he said. "Every generation goes through this.

"But here we are dealing with drugs that are known to be dangerous ... with disastrous results."

He noted Chudzik was a private in the army and would likely have to face disciplinary action in addition to the sentence imposed in court.

He fined him $100 for possession of MDA and $75 on the marijuana charge.

David Alexander Kvashenikoff, 19, of 1234 Fort, was sentenced to four months in jail after he was found guilty in provincial court Thursday of attempting to steal a battery from a truck parked at Langley and Courtney Aug. 24.

Two people pleaded guilty to impaired driving and were fined $300 each. John Albert Hudson, 38, of 3255 Cook, was stopped by police in Victoria Oct. 4. Gordon Dennis Chadney, 21, of 69½ San Jose, was stopped Sept. 2 in Saanich.

Thirty-year-old Edward MacDonald Watson of 122 Coronation Crescent, Campbell River, was remanded to Oct. 19 for sentencing after St. Jorre found him guilty of mischief.

The charge arose out of an incident Aug. 25 when Gordon's Towing, 732 Pembroke Street, reported someone had tried to drive a car through the front gate of their impounded car lot.

The escape bid was unsuccessful, but police said $450 damage was done to the gate.

Arena Resounds For Right Show

Jack Morgan, here's an abject and grovelling apology on my part.

I've scoffed, sneered and sniffed at the acoustics in the big Blanshard boxla barn. But no more.

The sound at this week's Johnny Cash show converted me.

It was fantastic — with the one hitch of June Carter being so-badly miked that one could hardly hear her dulcet tones ... but that was an electronic problem and nothing to do with you and yours.

And, the more than 7,000 people who jammed the arena got their money's(worth.

It goes to prove two things:

That given the right show, with the right sound, Memorial is the ideal place to present a big show;

And that the Garden City is ripe for more large-name country spectaculars.

On the second point, John Ansell of CJVI, local sponsors of the Cash appearance, assures me that the station is planning further shows featuring famed C and W stars over the course of the coming winter ... details of which will be mentioned in this corner as soon as they are available.

Even though it was a flying visit to the Garden City for the Cash show — Big John zoomed in on his chartered jet a little more than an hour before show time and zoomed out again an hour or so after the curtain went down — he didn't short-change Victoria fans.

From the opening chords of Big River to the closing chorus of his encore, he had those 7,000 people in the palm of his hand ... even those sitting in the late-sale rush seats behind the stage to whom he turned and sang directly several times.

The show was tight, controlled and professional, with every homily pertaining to family, country and God clicked neatly into place.

And that was what the people wanted.

Even if it did cloy a little too sickly sweet a ttimes.

Folk buffs are in for a "blast from the past" in two weeks time at the McPherson when the Kingston Trio comes to town.

However, the group coming here, Oct. 28, is not the original Kingston Trio of Tom Dooley, Greenback Dollar, M.T.A. and Tiajuana Jail fame but a new group with only two things in common with the trio who put folk music on the map in the late Fifties and early Sixties.

They do all the old and beloved material and Bob Shane — now approaching 40 — is still lead singer and main guitar picker.

The other members of the group hand-picked by Shane when he decided to reform the Trio last year are Pat Horine on bass and Jim Connor, who has an impressive list of credits in bluegrass bands on banjo and harp.

Well, the Good Times sure rolled through Victoria in one heck of a hurry.

With the speed of a souped-up '51 Merc, they rolled into the Haida a week ago Friday and trucked on out again Thursday after playing to houses delicately described by a theatre spokesman as "a disaster."

Pity.

Because Let The Good Times Roll as well as being a good movie is also a set period piece, just as freaky today as those 1930s flicks which crop up with depressing regularity on Ch. 13.

It's memorable not only for the "golden oldies" but also for the spliced-in news clips — including some almost-obscene footage of then vice-president Richard Nixon campaigning as a gas jockey and leering while wiping windshields.

However, for the few who did manage to catch the film, it no doubt reinforced their impressions — if their impressions needed reinforcing — that some of the old-time cats like Bo Diddley and Chuck Berry can still outplay and outrock the current crop of pop stars.

'OLD BUT NEW' sound comes from revamped Kingston Trio which will be here Oct. 28.

UVIC THEATRE SCHEDULE

A schedule of theatrical events for the fall-winter-spring semesters of the University of Victoria theatre department was released this week.

All will be open to the theatre-going public of Greater Victoria.

A play by Moliere — Les Femmes Savantes (The Learned Ladies) — will be presented in English translation at the Phoenix Theatre from Oct. 25 to Nov. 3.

Director of the comedy is faculty member Dr. Harvey Miller.

In December a highlight of last Christmas season will be reflected in the performance of Adam, a medieval mystery play from the 12th century at Maltwood Museum.

David Parry is again the director.

During the mid-winter fine arts mini-festival at UVic, the Phoenix stage will offer a mime presentation (probably in multi-media style) under the direction of Kaz Piesowocki. This will take place between Feb. 1 and 9.

In late March the department will again collaborate with Victoria Theatre Guild at Langham Court, in a presentation of Kurt Weill's Threepenny Opera. This will be directed by UVic's Giles Hogya.

A series of productions by graduate and undergraduate students will conclude the on-campus season in early March.

Young Canadian Soloists Perform With Symphony

A program that offers the various delights of the Sibelius violin concerto, Rachmaninoff's scintillating and romantic second piano concerto and Butterfly's haunting aria, One Fine Day, promises to titillate the taste buds of most music lovers.

It's next for Victoria Symphony patrons, coming Oct. 21-22.

The concerts present three young Canadian artists — CBC Talent Festival winners — and this makes the occasion all the more important.

Soprano Anna Chornodolska, pianist Linn Hendry and violinist Malcolm Lowe are, by virtue of their success in the CBC festival, the best of the best of the oncoming generation of artists. The CBC festival is conducted yearly on a Canada-wide basis and is searchingly judged at all competition levels.

Chornodolska is Austrian-born and came to Canada with her Ukrainian parents at an early age, growing up in Montreal.

She studied music and voice at the Quebec Conservatoire and McGill University, has made recital tours of France and has sung in CBC opera productions and with the Montreal Symphony.

A native British Columbian, Linn Hendry came to Victoria several years ago from the Okanagan to study with Robin Wood. Now a graduate of the Victoria Conservatory, she has performed with orchestras in Quebec City, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria as well as with the Carnegie Festival Orchestra in Dunfermline, Scotland.

She has also appeared in solo recital and chamber music concerts in France and England as well as in Canada, and been a regular soloist on CBC radio for the past two years.

Those who have heard him perform consider the violin artistry of 20-year-old Lowe altogether amazing.

A Manitoba farm boy until his parents moved to Regina in 1962, he has been the recipient of many scholarships and awards and won first place in both the Montreal Symphony competition and CBC Festival in 1971-72.

At the present time he is in his third year of study with Ivan Galamian and Jaime Laredo at the Curtis Institute of Music.

He has been guest artist with several major Canadian orchestras.

The three young artists will also be presented in recital at the McPherson Playhouse on Oct. 25.

The program for the symphony pair of concerts conducted by Laszlo Gati will include Rossini's overture, Scala di Seta, and Bachianas Brasilieros No. 5 by Villa Lobos.

First of the Duncan series by Victoria Symphony will take place Friday with Hendry and Lowe as guest artists.

Sure this apartment would sell like a "Hotcake" anywhere — but put it on Beach Drive in Oak Bay where the high cost of land doesn't usually allow for so much space and value at such a moderate price — and you can really see what the excitement is all about.

And there's even more to the Hotcake than the floor plan shows. Like undercover electronically secured parking for each and every apartment, laundries on every floor, EVEN room for freezers. And a sauna, a therapeutic pool, exercise pavillion, plus a hobby room.

But that's not all. The Royal Alexander has three other one and two-bedroom models from just $29,900 to $49,900.

She will sing an aria from Bach's St. John Passion on Wednesday's program.

Instrumentalists taking part are UVic music graduate, teacher and organist of St. Matthias Church, Frances Carter, who will perform on organ and harpsichord; Lanny Pollet, flutist, Uvic music lecturer and member of the Pacific Wind Quintet; Glen Fast, recorder, fourth year music student at Uvic, and Linda Hougland-Daniels, cellist.

The program will include works by Telemann, Purcell, Pachelbel and Hans Martin Linde.

Harold Town's Livesay

Memories Of Growing Up

By ANNE McDOUGALL

This is a delightful slice of Canadiana, starting with the cover, a portrait by Harold Town of Canadian writer Dorothy Livesay, aglow in a big sunhat, lit by Prairie golds, pinks and yellows. I find it a good likeness as well as a satisfying abstract design, quite a trick.

There are 15 short autobiographical stories inside, seven of them published before. The most impressive is probably "Matt," the story of children's cruelty to a mentally retarded boy. "Anna" is a touching story about a Polish immigrant who finally bolts the loneliness of her maid's job to join the Indian family around the point.

Dorothy Livesay has amazing skill in writing from a child's point of view. There is no cuteness whatsoever. In fact she hides none of the bewilderment or nastiness that she remembers in her own family, including her own reactions under the guise of "Elizabeth."

Some of her endings may be a bit pat. There's a bittersweet twist that turns up with regularity, but then they weren't written to be read together and separately they stand up well as short stories.

A marvellous feeling for the look and feel of Winnipeg and the surrounding countryside runs throughout the book. The cold snaps as the children rush out to play. There are vivid pictures of the iceslide in the backyard, the new green sleigh with the pink rose in the middle, the bundling up (and then re-bundling when wet — oh, terrible pre-snowsuit days) in the heavy navy Red River coats, red leggings, tuques and mitts.

Spring comes across the Prairies and father takes the two little girls for a romp to look for crocus — first one picked wins five cents. Later on the heat comes down and Elizabeth and her best friend spend the afternoons under the rhubarb leaves keeping cool.

While I don't find the book memorable (although I'd like to frame the cover) I am quite aware of a feeling of happiness in reading this writer. She knows this country and has written about it for so long that any new piece she does drops in like a welcome addition to a fabric you already know and love.

Like many others who grew up on Christopher Robin and Buckingham Palace and Kensington Gardens (never quite sure where they all were) I find it refreshing to be living in Canada at a time when our references are all coming closer to home. We too, as children, hurled our mitts and tuques down to the cellar to drip. There's a distinction, obviously, between the merely familiar and something approaching art, but there's little doubt of the poetry in Dorothy Livesay's writing. Harold Town captures her courageous spirit truly.

Essence Of Berton

By PAT BARCLAY

There's a passage in Pierre Berton's new book which I'd like to quote, long though it is, because it conveys both the spirit of the book and something of the essence of the man. Berton, whose Cinemascope personality makes most other writers look like a strip of eight millimetre film, is a true phenomenon, one well worth getting to know.

In Drifting Home he reveals more of himself than we have seen before. The book is an account of a twelve-day trip down the Yukon River, from Bennett B.C. to Dawson, which he made in the summer of 1972. (Being Berton, he took along fourteen people, three rubber rafts, a freight canoe and nineteen boxes of food.) Here's the quotation:

"'Why, it's like an old-fashioned town!' Peggy Anne exclaims, looking up the street at the old frame buildings, with their cornices and fretwork, their bay windows and overhanging balconies. I am startled by her delight, which contrasts with my own despair. I am seeing Dawson now through four pairs of eyes. I see it as my father first saw it when it was in its prime: the biggest city west of Winnipeg and north of San Francisco, with running water, electric lights and motion pictures, with the buildings spanking new, the streets crowded with men from all over the globe, the restaurants serving oyster dinners while string orchestras played the classics, and the dancehalls, the rambling houses and the saloons roaring full blast day and night. I see it as I remember it from my boyhood: a very ordinary town no different as far as I knew from any other town — rather, in fact, like the small towns I used to read about in Booth Tarkington's novels, complete with dusty roads and shady walks, neat, flower-decked cottages and pretty, steepled churches, with horses clip-clopping down the main street and the river running past our front door. I see it as it looks to me now, through the eyes of a returning native: shrivelled, faded and apparently dying — so many shattered windows, so many boarded-up doors, so many gardens abandoned to the weeds, so many wooden sidewalks smothered by the invading alders. Last, I see it through the eyes of my children: a quaint storybook town, a fossilized piece of the past, romantic in its old age, even charming in its decay — a sort of Disneyland here in the Yukon, except that nothing is made up, everything is real, all is history."

It is Berton's multi-layered vision, his prevailing consciousness of the relativity of time, that makes Drifting Home such an affecting book.

We travel down-river with the Berton family, but we also learn something of the history of Frank Berton, Pierre's father, and we share the author's memories of what it was like to grow up in the Dawson of the 1920's. ("To a boy raised in a ghost town, the Boom is something that belongs to the past and not to the future."

All this is encompassed in prose which skilfully integrates Berton's own words with those of his daughter Patsie, who keeps the ship's log, and with excerpts from letters written by Frank Berton during his journey down the Yukon River. It seems a slim and simple work, but the organization it involved must hape been prodigious.

Raconteur, chef, romantic, crusader, patriarch — the list of the many sides of Pierre Berton goes on and on. Strongest of all, perhaps, is his awareness of family. For Berton, the continuity of the family is a flow which transcends time, just as the Yukon River links the past with the present and future.

At one point Patsie finds a "little aluminium pot, and a serviceable one, too, lying in the moss".

It is one of many such articles left behind by the goldseekers and settlers of the past. Only a few pages before, Berton has been struck by the likeness of his mother which he sees reflected in Patsie's face. Drifting Home contains a good deal of this kind of knee-deep romanticism, but it has been shrewdly seasoned with realistic detail and comfortable humor.

Above all, the book is remarkable for the wealth of detail which its author can recall about his boyhood. Always on the end of a geographical limb, Dawson during the winter months was totally sealed off from what young Pierre thought of as the "Outside world". This isolation bred a fierce longing for lights, crowds, circuses, and the joys of Coca Cola, fireworks and roller skates. It also bred, as we all know, a writer of intense curiosity and enthusiasm.

There is a great children's book in Pierre Berton, a book about his Dawson boyhood, and I hope, for all our children's sakes, that some day he will decide to write it.

He Challenges Our Responses

By SUSAN MUSGRAVE

It wasn't so many years ago that homosexuality was a taboo subject and there are many countries where it is still a criminal offence. It's one of those cases, like capital punishment, where enlightened legislators are years ahead of public opinion.

Most consenting heterosexual adults cannot accept the "queer" side of love, perhaps basically because they're scared of it in themselves more than in others. So homosexuals (men at least — females seem exempt from the normal prejudices and usually feature prominently in male pornography) still have to live underground, meeting in drag, in public lavatories, or walking their midnight dogs.

David Watmough's collection of monodramas does, in its simple way, produce a number of complex emotions: does the book work as "literature," quite apart from the homosexual overtones; why is the fact that it does concern itself with homosexuality any more worth mentioning than if the subject were heterosexual love; if readers feel sympathetic is it because they feel they ought to be, since here is a man virtually exposing himself to the world and to a situation that many people would be ashamed of?

To begin with, these pieces are dramas, and in this case are meant for one actor to perform. Even on the page they are powerful visual images of undoubted literary strength. Since Watmough does talk so freely about his life — assuming this, as stated in the introduction, to be more or less autobiographical — then one cannot help but feel the homosexual pieces are meant to be paid special attention to.

If the reader is sympathetic (perhaps I should simply say unprejudiced), fair enough. If not, the book has other things going for it anyway.

The early pieces in Ashes for Easter take place in Cornwall where Davey Bryant, the principal character, spent his boyhood. They contain glimpses of everyday Cornish life and most of them are in dialect. The rhythms and resonances in his speech at this stage have a definite Celtic ring — there is a density of language which is absent in a lot of New World writing. For instance, an old woman "limped elmward with asphalt stick" and he glances down the "cow-patted wind of the lane:" phrases which evoke almost exclusively an old world atmosphere and sensibility.

At the age of 15 Davey takes his sister to a dance and meets up with a black American army sergeant — there is a brief sexual encounter in a churchyard before the sergeant realizes how young the boy is. In A First Job he goes to work on a newspaper before leaving Cornwall to join the Royal Navy. One night he gets arrested for "importuning and soliciting" in a park — he is remanded and finally convinces the psychiatrist that he is not a homosexual after all.

Then there is a visit to America (Black Memory) where he meets another black man — this time in a men's room — and goes home with him on a bus into a Negro slum district. When they finally reach a sordid room with two unmade and dirty beds, he realizes he is trapped. Too frightened to make love, he discovers there's a third man in the room with them who, of course, robs him and wants to throw him in the river afterwards.

Hank, the man he met in the lavatory, likes Davey's English accent so persuades Joe, the mean "yalla Nigra," to spare his life. He even gives him back $10 and a subway token and shows him how to get home.

Davey says "You didn't have to give me any of the money back. I-I think you're the only really generous person I've ever met." Hank says, "Now you jest git right back to England, huh? New York aint no place for you Kid, talkin' like that. You git back and play that there cricket with the fuckin' King, you hear me?"

"Wickininnish Memory" offers an equally powerful blend of violence and tenderness. A visit to Long Beach sparks off a reminiscence:

"Why did I think of you, Franz, whose show biz knowledge could hardly have been more than cameo flickers of sleazy nightclubs in the ruins of post-war Hamburg, and whose handful of Canadian years had not been more than the quiet ripple of English Bay on your nocturnal prowls — and never this butch Pacific coast of Vancouver Island where man still interlopes?"

It is the story of Franz who was too eager to please and who desperately wants to get a job in show business by knowing a famous man like Davey.

"Lust has its own laws. At times of erection and emissions it doesn't like to be asked for jobs. Or to be told from pillows that your hands, Franz, are adept at making papier-mache figures and that you would like to be a stagehand."

There are more obvious sexual descriptions in this piece than in any of the others: he writes about "a large basket obscenely defined behind the ludicrously small trunks that would have been called a bikini on a real lady." At the same time it is an archetypal heterosexual situation: when Franz persists in his attempts to see Davey, the latter says: "The ploy was so simple I felt a knot of emotion in me. Like the first indication of pregnancy perhaps."

But Franz just doesn't have what it takes and in the end he kills himself. Two policemen come to read Davey excerpts from the diary he kept — a simple, sad ending, indicative of the intense underlying emotions in any human relationship.

"I shall work like a slave for him if he wants me to. But he is not that kind at all. He is going to get me a good paying job in the movies and I will buy him lots of presents."

The last two monodramas tell of Davey's return to Cornwall and how he scatters his father's ashes to his native soil — realizing he is the last of the Bryants and this isn't where he belongs any more.

I'd like to hear David Watmough in person. If his stage performance is half as seductive as these stories it would be quite a show. He would be bound to grab an audience right in its stock responses.

Movie Maverick

When they were filming Mutiny on the Bounty, instead of boarding the ship at the dock in Tahiti with everyone else, Marlon Brando would order a speedboat to take him to the "Bounty" out at sea. By the time the film was finished, it was reckoned the temperamental star had cost the production $6 million. The film bombed.

This does not seem to be typical of Brando any more than anything else he does is typical of him. He emerges as an unpredictable but genuine maverick, a man thought by some to be harboring an angel within him, by others (particularly certain directors) to be an absolute monster of egotism, crudity and obstinacy.

I find this "unauthorized biography", as it's subtitled, treats its sensational subject with restraint and good taste. It is not an expose in any way. It has been well researched and gives insight into Brando's home and upbringing (conventional and prosperous on the surface but pretty unstable underneath); good anecdotes from his acting career and discreet handling of his unconventional personal life. The latter was perhaps essential; Brando guards ferociously all details on his two ex-wives, his present common-law household on Tahiti and his three sons and daughter.

The acting career is a story in itself and has run like a roller-coaster between the hits (Streetcar named Desire, 1947, On the Waterfront, 1954) and the flops of the later '50's and 60's. Brando, of course, burst into life recently with the all-time highest-grossing film "The Godfather" and followed it up with the current "Last Tango in Paris".

Critics have not always been kind. Veteran director Lewis Milestone says: "Brando has only acted once, in "Streetcar". British actor John Gielgud said, of The Godfather, that Brando was mannered and slowed up the film.

This is not the general public's reaction, however. The book shows that, in actual life, Brando has shown a compassion for people in trouble that may make its way through film to the audience, in spite of his irregular methods along the way.

During the years of intense struggle for civil rights in the U.S., for instance, Brando took a consistent position and turned out to give his support. Political columnist James Wechsler wrote: "There are few people who seem to know and care as much as Brando about the quest for human dignity".

Brando, now at a sort of pinnacle, professes a disdain for acting and feels he is still looking for another way of life. The book may be stretching things when it claims that he is to film-acting what D. W. Griffith was to film directing.

For film buffs there is a very useful and complete section (almost 100 pages) giving dates, original casts and photographs from every play and film Marlon Brando has made. — A.M.

They Huffed Into History

By TORCHY ANDERSON

They huffed and puffed their way into the history of British Columbia — from the dumpy little Shays to the steaming monsters that were dethroned by the smelly diesels — the 2-8-2s, the 4-6-4s, the 2-6-0s and many more, locomotives that were the work-horse of B.C. industry from its infancy. For generations now going and gone they were heroes.

Robert D. Turner has gathered a vast amount of information about the railroads of B.C., presented in this volume with the finest collection of historic railway photographs I have seen. If this sounds overenthusiastic blame it on a life-long love affair with the big power on the front end.

More than 20 years before the Canadian dream of a transcontinental railway became reality little British-built locomotives were hauling Vancouver Island coal for the Dunsmuirs.

With their gallent plumes of steam and smoke towering over the tree tops, steam locomotives were fighting their way over the formidable Malahat grades, crossing deep canyons on wooden trestles to deliver passengers and goods to Nanaimo and, later, Courtenay.

Are they dead? Just recently wise men looked into the not too distant future and wondered if massive death on the highways and the sudden looming shortage of oil would send us back to the rails behind coal-fed locomotive power.

British Columbia has had all sorts of steam transportation. Power was generated from wood, from coal and from oil. Then came electric trains, only to be crowded out by better highways for buses and private cars. The unforgettable wail of a steam locomotive whistle echoing in the mountains was supplanted by the chorus of smashing fenders.

Turner's fine book has five main parts. First the mining railroads, followed by the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. These are followed by the railways, steam and electric of the Saanich Peninsula. The Dunsmuir-inspired and promoted E and N was sold to the CPR and later the Canadian National Railways (old Canadian Northern) invaded southern B.C.

The last section deals with the logging railways, with Shays playing centre stage. The Shay was the "climbingest" locie to pipe its way through the big timber. It was invented by an American named Shay. On its left side it looked like a regular small locomotive. On its right it exposed in innards to the world — a vast, puzzling combination of gears and drivers right out in daylight.

The Shay was the King (maybe Queen) of one of British Columbia's shoriest and steepest railways. It was built to bring ore from the Lanora mine a short, steep distance to the old smelter at Crofton. It attained altitude on its short length by a series of switch-backs. All that is left of the old smelter is a memory and a casual inspection will probably fail to detect the climbing course of the Shays up Mount Sicker.

One of my early favorites was the Cordwood Limited of the V and S (Victoria and Sidney). It started from mid-town (somewhere in the vicinity of the present Arena, I think) and puffed gaily past Elk Lake, hence to the seashore just above high tide mark right out to the end of the Sidney wharf. It was for years the only land transportation from the Sidney district to Victoria.

Additional to his definitive details of "power" grades and wooden trestles that look like matchsticks, the author includes many good maps and interesting old time-tables.

A handsome book.

An Old Controversy

As long as Canadians talk railways and railway lore there are bound to be arguments over the Kicking Horse Pass: why it was chosen when, by adding 100 miles to reach Burrard Inlet, the steel could have come to tidewater with a saving of lives, power and time.

THE GREAT KICKING HORSE BLUNDER, by Edmund S. Pugsley. Evergreen. $8.00.

By Pugsley's title it is evident where he stands on the argument. And to prove his case he tells the story of disasters that the steel led to in the high passes, canyons, and grades originally as high as five per cent.

Why did the CPR take the more difficult southern path through the mountains instead of the highly recommended Yellowhead? The answer given by many reputable historians is that the southern route blocked the Americans from taking over transportation on the southwestern prairies.

Author Pugsley carries on his end of the controversy in a book full of historic railway photographs and vivid accounts of how trains were buried and men died when they challenged the high passes of the Rockies and Selkirks. —T.A.

Stanfield Gets Barrett's Pat

Conservative leader Robert Stanfield got a little encouragement Friday from another veteran of the opposition benches, Premier Dave Barrett.

"I think it's very good, very worthwhile to visit other leaders," commented Barrett as the two emerged from a 35-minute meeting in the premier's office.

"You've got to realize that in the British parliamentary system, the opposition leader is only an election away from forming the government," he added, recalling his own 11 years in the political wilderness which ended with the 1972 election.

"That's the stuff I like to hear," Stanfield said, grinning.

"Politically speaking, I still vote NDP," the premier shot back.

The Conservative leader is on a cross-country tour to meet provincial leaders, and he said "all have talked very frankly with me and I am going back to Ottawa much better informed."

Barrett said the two discussed the cost of living, housing, resource policy and energy in particular.

Bogus Bills May Multiply

Victoria police warned today that the problem of counterfeit $50 and $100 bills in the city could spread to $5, $10 and $20 bills.

Police said so far none of the smaller denomination phonies have appeared in Greater Victoria, but they could be heading this way.

The bogus bills are confined to the older-type, less colorful bills, police said, which now make up only about one-quarter of $5, $10 and $20 bills in circulation.

The older bills are apparently easier to counterfeit, police said, because they use only four colors instead of the 14 on the newer bills.

The valid, old $5 bills should have either C, S or X as the last letter in the serial. The good $10 bills must have D, T or V while the proper letters for the $20 bills is either E or W.

Counterfeit $50 bills began trickling into Victoria after the July 1 weekend and 80 have been turned into police so far.

Phoney $100 bills began turning up last weekend and three have been turned into banks in the city and a woman tried unsuccessfully to pass another one at a Victoria import store.

BEWARE WATERGATE -DIEF

TORONTO (CP) — Former prime minister John Diefenbaker accused the Trudeau government Friday night of pressing legislation that would make possible a Canadian Watergate case.

Speaking at a dinner in his honor, the 78-year-old Progressive Conservative MP said the Conservative party must never accept the bill on wiretapping as it stands now.

"I am not prepared to accept a provision in the bill where so-called emergency wiretapping may be put into effect for 36 hours without any judicial order. There are always judges available."

Water Drowns Crop Hopes

EDMONTON (CP) — "We don't even dare think about it," said Lucie St. Andre of the financial loss she and husband Roger face after wet weather that has almost forced them to abandon the crop four miles northwest of the northern Alberta community of Girouxville.

With most of Prairie grain crops harvested in southern areas, large acreage in northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan remain in water-soaked fields that defy attempts by machinery to move in.

Industry officails estimate that 91 million bushels — more than one-sixth of this year's total estimated Prairie wheat crop of 585 million bushels — still is not harvested.

Earlier this week, the Alberta wheat pool said most points in the province north and northwest of a line from Calgary through Lloydminster reported less than half of their wheat threshed, and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool said nearly half the bread wheat crop was unharvested in northern Saskatchewan.

Mrs. St. Andre said most of the municipal district of Smoky River in Alberta's Peace River block is affected.

She estimated 25 inches of rain fell during this year's growing season compared with an average nine inches.

"The machinery just bogs down. We can't even get a swather in and many people have told me they just aren't going to bother trying to get the crop harvested."

She said the only hope is a sudden, hard frost — without snow — that would freeze the ground enough to allow farm machinery to operate.

The crop then could be harvested, but the financial return would be reduced because the rain-soaked grain would be of a lower grade and weigh less.

Without The Labels They Progress

Singalong with teacher Corrine Carson is something all the children enjoy

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

When a school child gets singled out for special learning assistance, he runs the risk of getting labelled.

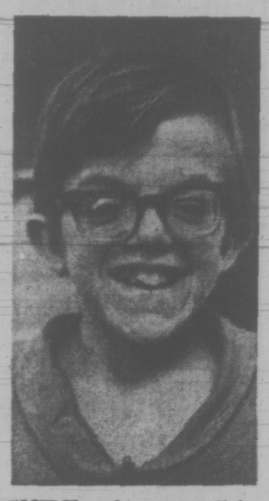
Stuck in a "special" class for slow learners or the emotionally disturbed, he can sometimes find himself called a "dummy" by the other children.

Those labels hurt a young child.

It is to avoid them that George Jay elementary school, 1118 Princess, decided to dissolve its special classes this fall and open a centre for exceptional children.

George Jay staff members are determined that going to the new centre will have no stigma attached to it, and they say they're succeeding.

"I've never had a kid coming in here saying, I'm in a dummy class, a mental class," said Ray Shergold, co-ordinator of the centre, in an interview this week.



SMILE of accomplishment lights up the face of young Fred Brown as he sees his school work improving daily.

It would be hard to pin one label on the 67 children now attending the George Jay centre.

They range from very slow learners to gifted children who learn much faster than the average.

What unites them, said Shergold, is the fact that "they can't get along in regular classrooms".

There's one boy who had a complete learning block about arithmetic that hampered his work in a regular class. In the centre for exceptional children, he's written a novel.

Another small boy is a whiz at reading any kind of book and easily memorizes whole passages, but he was just too noisy and excitable for the regular class.

A set of twins who were constant truants before they came to the centre have discovered they like school, said Shergold.

Shergold and the five teachers in the centre take each child individually to try to discover why he wasn't learning before he came to the centre.

Maybe he's a slow learner, or emotionally disturbed, or maybe he's got problems at home.

As co-ordinator, Shergold deals with social workers, psychologists, parents, and all other people concerned about each child.

The centre is a cluster of four rooms, including an office for Shergold, in one corner of the school. It's noisier than the average classroom, and the children are freer to roam around when they get restless.

One room is being set up where children can work on their perceptual motor training and improving their manipulative skills.

In it is a punching bag. When a child at the centre feels frustration building up inside him, the teachers want him to take it out on the punching bag instead of the child next to him.

Sitting in his office, Shergold has a continual stream of children popping in to proudly show him a picture they've drawn, or their writing lesson, or their reading ability.

He listens to each of them, gives them a hug, and sends them on their way.

"Most kids, all they need is a lot of TLC (tender loving care)," Shergold said. They need attention, need to feel important in someone's eyes.

Ideally the centre should have a teacher or other adult for each child, and vice-principal Don Falder said the school is thinking of bringing in some volunteer mothers.

Many children only attend the centre part-time, and spend the rest of the day in a regular class.

"We try not to pull them out of the classroom," said Shergold. "We're trying to keep them integrated."

There's a core group at the centre which could never make it in a regular class, he said, but the rest will be gradually eased back in.

Among those getting special part-time help is a group of new Canadians who are coached in their English at the centre.

Next month Shergold hopes to start a class for exceptionally gifted children.

In it a child with a special aptitude for math (or another subject) can spend part of the school day working at the centre at his own pace, learning to use a slide rule or dipping into high school math.

'We'll Do Anything' To Reach the People

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

The Victoria office of the Canadian Immigration Department makes house calls.

It's all a part of the "we'll do anything to reach the people," program to get landed status for illegal immigrants, senior immigration officer Doug Cook said today.

"It's all a matter of attitude," Cook said. "We're an immigrant-receiving country and we want people."

Since the landed immigrant registration project began Aug. 15, the Victoria office has handled 489 applicants. The amnesty offer for people who have been in the country illegally since Nov. 30, 1972, runs out Monday at midnight and Cook expects the number of registrants to climb during the weekend.

"We'll do anything we can and anything that's necessary to get people to register," he said.

That includes making house calls.

"We had a phone call one day from a rest home saying they had three elderly women patients who were retired, Roman Catholic nuns from the States. The women had been here for years and hadn't registered and were really worried about it," Cook said.

"We sent somebody out to talk to them and now they're in the country legally."

Most of the people who walk into the office on the third floor of the federal building at 816 Government, have a story to tell.

"We had a German come in one day. He was a retired logger for MacMillan-Bloedel and had lived in Canada for a long time. He finally admitted to his wife that he was a seaman deserter and had been living here illegally all this time and she evicted him," Cook said.

"She told him she wasn't going to live with a criminal and that he had better not go home until he had registered with us—he did."

Most of the people who come to the office walk in the door glancing over their shoulder.

"They're just scared to death. They're shy and nervous and they've magnified the whole thing in their minds until they're just absolutely certain they're going to be deported."

The highest percentage of immigrants registered are from Britain, Cook said.

"They came here years ago and figured that because they were British, they didn't have to do anything except settle down here. Now they are realizing that they have actually been here illegally."

The office registered one titled British gentleman, a Queen's Counsel lawyer and a member of a prestigious Vancouver law firm.

The people registered so far come from almost every country in the world — Iran, Korea, Hong Kong, Italy, Greece, Sweden, Germany, Portugal, India, China, etc.

Many of the applicants are young American draft dodgers and deserters who didn't register when they first moved to Canada.

Immigration departments all over Canada had registered 41,189 people up to Friday night, well below the projected figure of 75-100,000.

On Vancouver Island, the forecast was closer. The department expected about 1,000 people and so far 750 have registered.

In Victoria, the immigration office will be open until 5 p.m. today, from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Sunday and from 8 a.m.-midnight Monday.

In smaller Island communities, the Manpower centres are handling the original applications and then turning them over to the Victoria office. The Manpower centres will be open all day Sunday and until midnight Monday.

"People who come in here aren't used to us," Cook said.

"They're used to authoritarian immigration departments who don't want them — we want them."

Statement Coming On Assault

Sooke RCMP said this morning they will release a statement later today on the circumstances surrounding the assault of a 19-year-old girl Thursday night.

The girl, whom police have declined to name, was found by a motorist lying beside the West Coast Road 10 miles west of Sooke and waving feebly for help.

Police said she was badly beaten about the face and was in a state of shock. She was taken to Victoria General Hospital where her condition today was reported as fair.

Police said the girl told them she had been hitchhiking on the Trans Canada highway that evening and a man had picked her up.

Police refused to say if they have a suspect or if charges are contemplated.

Ask The Times

Q. Could you tell me if forms for making wills, which can be purchased in stationary stores are legal? P.C.

A. The forms, which sell locally for 75 cents, are legal but not recommended unless your possessions are minimal. If jointly-owned land or life insurance policies are involved it's safer to have the will drawn by a lawyer. The standard fee for a simple will is $25. Legal fees for a more complicated will rarely exceed $50.

The Wills Act states wills may be filed with the department of vital statistics but they can be kept anywhere. They can be written on anything, providing they're witnessed by two people.

Q. I've always envied women who can grow their nails long because, what with dish washing and gardening, mine are always broken off and a mess. Could you give me any idea how long nails could grow under favorable circumstances? G.W.

A. Believe it or not, the longest recorded finger nails belonged to a man—a Chinese priest living in Shanghai in 1910. He took 27 years to grow them to a length of 22 and three quarter inches! Human nails will normally grow from cuticle to cutting length in from 117 to 138 days.

Be Ready Monday!

Door-to-door canvassing for this year's United Way appeal begins Monday, with an objective of 20 per cent of the overall appeal target of $680,000.

Right now the appeal has raised $205,519, or 30 per cent of the objective, chairman Murray Glazier said today.

"Any layoff or diminuation of effort at this point in the appeal would be disastrous," Glazier said.

United Way appeal money is used to support 23 service agencies in the Victoria area.

"The work done by the canvassers in the next 10 days, and the response of the donors, will be crucial to the success of our campaign," said Glazier.

"If the canvassers will make their callbacks this will maximize the opportunity for people to give," he said.

"At the same time, we ask the person on the other side of the door to remember that all canvassers are volunteers, and be ready to respond when called on," he added.

But Are You Looking With Your Eyes?

THERE IS A WATCH BIRD WATCHING ME. Where it stands in the shallows, its head with dagger bill and back-swept plume is higher than my short ribs. Presently it will tuck its neck into a U-curve, unfurl wings that span close to six feet, and flap solemnly off with legs trailing behind. This gangling local resident is a great blue heron or shitepoke.

We once assumed that our guests from the cities would spot the fishing heron instantly. Few do. Most don't.

Sometimes this failure to perceive reflects on overall lack of interest in the natural world. Much oftener, though, the visitor who fetches the heron into view with an assist from my wife or me is both pleased and surprised.

"You mean it's been there all the time?" he may say. "I don't know how I missed it!"

To look is not necessarily to see. Our children when small would sometimes become impatient with our perceptual denseness.

"You're not looking with your eyes," one or other would complain.

A precise statement, that, of a common human condition. With gifted exceptions, we suffer from a form of departmentalized blindness.

Preoccupation contributes to this state. The mind grinding away at other matters may not respond to the signal relayed by the eyes. A writer immersed in a novel can be so gripped by his story characters that he passes friends on the street without recognizing them. The child who tracks mud into the house isn't necessarily hell-bent on making work for his mother. His inner vision of the pirate costume he plans to wear for Halloween trick-or-treating may have obscured the present reality of muddy shoes.

Familiarity is a notable aid to perception.

The heron, no angler more patient, is part of our accustomed low-tide scene. Like the glaucus winged gulls and the lesser shore birds, the seal that hauls out on an exposed rock and the porpoises rolling beyond the kelp bed, he is a familiar presence.

In theory, the unfamiliar should register instantly and strongly. Yet on the morning a family of otters came frolicking past, I achieved the seemily impossible by looking at these four sleek and whiskered transients without seeing them. Only when I sighted along a sharper observer's arm did the otters become visible.

If you are used to seeing deer in your comings and goings, you may have been startled and amazed at the failure of an unpracticed eye to detect one of our larger Vancouver Island wild creatures in open country at relatively close range.

You know what a deer looks like in its natural environment. If your companion doesn't, his apparent myopia is explainable. From lack of conditioning he is unable to distinguish picture from frame.

(No harm there, unless he has a rifle in his hands and insists on seeing deer where they are not. Then he becomes a menace against which even a blaze-orange jacket and cap may not prevail.)

Perhaps looking without seeing is at root a form of mental laziness. The mud-tracking small boy who can't find his homework assignment even though it is right under his nose suffers from no such inability when it comes to cars. At the length of a city block, he can distinguish make and model with eerie accuracy.

Incidentally, if you want to check your powers of observation and retention, have a go at the Scouting test known as Kim's game. Get someone to range 20 small, varied objects on a table-top, allow you a five-second look, then cover the lot. Your task is to list what you've seen.

If you turn in a perfect score, or even a reasonably high one, you have mastered the knack of looking and seeing better than most of us ever do.

More Scope for Advisors Would Avoid Tax Conflict

YOUR TAXES

By I. H. ASPER

With the appointment of a non-departmental advisory council to the minister of national revenue a few years ago, it was widely hoped that many of the administrative policies of revenue officials would be reviewed and changed in an effort to create more harmonious relations between taxpayer and tax collector.

The advisory council was drawn from across the country and includes many lawyers and accountants who know first-hand that even the fairest or best-intentioned legislation can become burdensome if its implementation is unnecessarily complex or inflexible.

Since the advisory council was formed there has been considerable improvement in departmental operations, but its work has been hampered because successive governments have for unexplained reasons treated the department of national revenue as a minor post.

The ministry itself has been used as a training ground for up and coming new ministers. The ministers have been changed with such frequency as to have prevented anyone from having had enough experience in the post to have really taken hold of the department.

In the result, the real power in the department has been exercised by civil servants who have been able to command their army of bureaucrats with little input from the elected ministers. While the civil servants are able, nevertheless, they are not elected and results tend to be insensitive to the attitudes of their customers, the taxpayers of Canada.

This is an undesirable situation from the taxpayer's point of view. When it is remembered that the only direct contact with government for millions of voters is their relationship with the tax department, the absence of strong political control over its operation is even politically unwise.

The situation could be improved if the citizens advisory council were given greater scope to search out and examine departmental practices which are often unnecessarily onerous on taxpayers. There are many.

An example of the kind of administrative practice which should be reconsidered is the department's policy regarding deductions for charitable contributions where the giver gets something nominal in return for his gift, such as a meal or free admission to some event.

This is particularly relevant at this time of year when church groups, athletic organizations, community clubs and cultural organizations are planning their annual appeals for funds.

It has become standard procedure for these groups to plan $10-, $20- or $50-per-plate banquets with the idea of having the hall and food donated or supplied at low cost. The profit goes to the charitable organization. Until a few years ago the organizations would issue receipts for tickets sold and the buyers would deduct the expense from their income as a charitable gift.

The fact is that in almost all cases, the expense is a charitable gift in the fullest sense. The ticket buyer isn't excited about having to go to the dinner unless it is some outstanding event such as a theatrical or other cultural program.

In any event, the tax department issued a bulletin in 1971 and again this year, stating that it would not allow deductions for these charitable gifts unless the charitable organization separated the amount of the gift from the value of what the donor received or was entitled to receive.

Thus, if one wishes to support the local amateur baseball club by buying $100 of tickets to the annual fund-raising banquet, the organization must first calculate the fair market value of the standard chicken dinner and then issue a receipt for the difference, say $60.

Strictly speaking, that's the law. But what is ignored is that in many cases, the donor isn't really interested in spending one of his few free evenings in a hot, crowded hall eating a standard catered meal. He may or may not attend the dinner, but even if he doesn't attend he is only allowed a tax deduction for part of his donation.

This increases his cost considerably; not enough to inspire him to take to the streets in protest, but enough to pin-prick and irritate him.

So much so that many business firms which normally support these community activities are becoming less generous. In fact some have resolved the tax problem by refusing to buy tickets to the fund-raising event and are making outright and fully-deductible donations instead.

It's quite true that this procedure solves the minor tax problem but that's not the point. The fact is that there are literally dozens of such bureaucratic irritants in the tax system, involving only minor tax and revenue implications. It would be worthwhile, in the name of simplicity, to reconsider many of them in an effort to reduce the amount of time and effort Canadians spend in complying with the tax law.

Tax administrators have bigger fish to fry and would welcome being relieved of the somewhat petty job of making sure someone doesn't get a tax-deductible meal or theatre ticket.

Inflation Remains Chief Economic Bug

TORONTO (CP) — Opening speakers at the annual business outlook session of the Conference Board in Canada zeroed on inflation as the main problem for economic planners in Canada and the U.S.

Arthur J. R. Smith, president of the Conference Board in Canada, said the Canadian economy now is at the end of "an old-fashioned business-cycle boom" except that price increases "have been far more pronounced."

Albert T. Sommers, chief economist for the Conference Board in the U.S., said the key issue for U.S. business "is how to contain domestic inflation without inducing serious recession, in other words, how to escape from the stop-go behavior of the past five years."

Smith said the booms in housing construction, spending on big-ticket consumer items, profit increases and growth of productivity now are generally over.

The booms have meant an expanding economy has pushed many industries to capacity.

"The key implication of this situation is that a business investment boom is now getting rather belatedly under way."

Smith said data on capital expenditures and surveys of planned business spending "lead me to the conclusion that the Canadian economy is poised for a substantial expansion of industrial capacity —all the more so since we had very little rise in real plant and equipment outlays in 1970-72, when we were experiencing accelerating growth of real output."

Smith, a former chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, said he sees several strong points in the Canadian economic outlook, including:

- Increased support for consumer spending through government "transfer payments," such as family allowances and aid for low-income families.
- Increased industrial demand because of low inventory positions.
- Strong demand in basic industries, such as food production ,mining and logging.

"In these circumstances, I would look to a Canadian economy in 1974 that will grow significantly less rapidly than it has grown this year— perhaps under 5 per cent real growth rate—but one that will grow significantly faster than the U.S. economy next year."

Smith said the problem of inflation "is primarily a problem of food and housing prices."

Little of the real growth in income during 1973 went to wage and salary earners because it flowed into higher corporate retained earnings, higher government taxes, higher rents and higher interest and dividend payments.

If this situation continued there would be a basis for "greatly increased pressures for wage and salary advances."

He said elements contributing to inflation have become "powerfully intertwined" in such a way as to create a floor for inflation.

"As a hunch, I would guess that this kind of combination of factors is now providing a kind of floor to inflation of somewhere close to 3 per cent per year in the industrial world."

Sexy, Funny Greer Free

LONDON — A three-minute divorce court hearing Friday freed women's lib campaigner Germaine Greer from marriage.

The court ended her 1968 marriage to construction worker and author Paul du Feu on his application that it had broken down irretrievably.

Miss Greer, 34, and du Feu, 38, had known each other for only three weeks before they married. They lived together for only three weeks afterward.

Du Feu said he and Miss Greer drank and fought a lot, but she did cook and do the housework.

"I would not marry her again but I would not discourage anyone else from marrying her. She is a sexy, funny lady."

CALGARY — A prisoner who escaped from the Calgary correctional institute called a radio station Thursday to protest news reports calling him "dangerous."

Frank Milkowski, 23 of Calgary, escaped from the prison Wednesday. He was a remand prisoner waiting trial on break-and-enter and drug trafficking charges.

Milkowski told the radio station that he couldn't understand why he should be considered dangerous.

RCMP said they wouldn't call him dangerous if he came back.

TORONTO — Ald. George Ben wos ordered out of a city council meeting Friday after comparing Mayor David Crombie to Adolf Hitler.

Refusing to sit down when ordered by the mayor, Ben raised his hand in a Nazi salute, saying: "Sieg Heil, mein fuehrer . . . you're nothing but a little Caesar."

The dispute began when Ald. Joe Piccininni asked Ald Art Eggleton a question about the advertising for a new assistant to the council's executive committee. Ben jumped to his feet saying he had a point of order, after Mayor Crombie declared Piccininni's question out of order.

Crombie asked Ben to withdraw the remakr, but he refused, saying, "I'll say what I really think of you."

NEWPORT, R.I. — Free beer was given out Thursday at a waterfront bar to mark Spiro Agnew's resignation as U.S. vice-president.

About 70 patrons enjoyed the free beer for about two hours.

Bar owner Dan Prentiss said he had promised his customers free beer whenever Agnew left public office.

MELBOURNE, Australia — Michelle Downes, the reigning Miss Australia, filed a libel-suit Friday against a weekly newspaper that published three pictures of her posing nude with an Afghan hound.

The suit for unspecified damages said publication of the photographs violated an agreement between Miss Downes, 21, and the photographer that they would never be published.

The photos with an accompanying article about Miss Australia appeared Wednesday in the Observer.

"The publication of nude pictures of Michelle has caused us a lot of unhappiness," said the beauty queen's mother, Mrs. Audrey Downes, in a statment after the suit was filed in Victoria Supreme Court.

AWARDS LESS HOOPLA

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian Film Awards took place Friday night with little fanfare. There had been fears they might not be held at all, and there was no ceremonial presentation of Etrogs, the Oscar-like statuettes named for designer Sorel Etrog.

Fourteen Quebec film producers announced earlier in the week they would boycott the awards. Consequently, the winners were announced in a news conference format but no presentations were made.

Quebec actress Genevieve Bujold, named best actress, was among the 125 present at the St. Denis Theatre.

Miss Bujold, without make-up and clad in blue jeans and lumberman's jacket, was barely recognizable as the actress known to film audiences for her roles in Anne of Thousand Days and King of Hearts, as well as Kamouraska.

Among the winners were:

—Coming Home by Bill Reid for best non-fiction feature film;

—Slipstream by David Acomba for the best fiction feature film;

—Miss Bujold, best actress, in Kamouraska by Claude Jutra;

—Jacques Godin, best actor, in O. K. Laliberte by the National Film Board.

The Wendy Michener Award for the outstanding contribution to this year's Canadian Film Awards and to the Canadian film industry went to Gilles Carle for Kamouraska. The film also took the Special Jury Prize for all-round excellence.

The Quebec Film Directors Association said it objected to the award because they are a mimicry of the Academy Awards in the United States and because they foster the idea there is "homogenity" in Canadian cinema.

The statement, presented on the first day of awards selection screening Monday, was signed by members of the association including Jean Saulnier, Gilles Gherien and Mr. Jutra, director of the well-known Mon Oncle Antoine as well as Kamouraska.

Members of the international jury who determined the awards were Roch Carrier, Quebecois novelist and dramatist, author of La Guerre, Yes Sir; Les Wedman, film critic for the Vancouver Sun; Roger Corman, U.S. maker of films such as Fall of the House of Usher and The Pit and the Pendulum; Ivan Passer, Czech film-maker currently making a feature in New York called Law and Order starring Carrol (Archie Bunker) O'Connor; Alain Jessua, French film-maker, whose first feature, La vie a l'envers, won the Society of Authors prize at Cannes in 1964.

Two Lesbians Win Custody of Kids

LAPEER, Mich. (AP) — Two avowed lesbians won a three-year fight for custody of their eight children Friday, after charges of moral depravity were dropped in Lapeer County probate court.

The children of Arlene Smith, 41, and Eunice Brown, 34, who are divorced, were taken from them in 1970. Police were called in after a quarrel and discovered the women were homosexuals.

A petition was filed in probate court and the children were taken away and placed in homes during the court battles.

The children, reunited with their mothers Friday, obviously were happy.

Judge George Lutz agreed to dismiss the case at the request of prosecuting attorney Edward Meth.

Lawyer William Hayes had pleaded the women's case through probate, circuit and state appeal courts.

The appeals court sent the case back to the probate court, where Hayes argued that the county had to prove moral depravity to win its case.

"I had the kids testify that they loved their mothers and all that stuff," he said.

He also subpoenaed school records to prove the children had better scholastic records while living at home with Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Brown.

AGNEW 'TRIVIAL' –GALBRAITH

GUELPH, Ont. (CP) — John Kenneth Galbraith, United States economist and one-time presidential adviser, told a news conferenee Friday that former vice-president Spiro Agnew was "a very trivial man in a very trivial job who now has been shown to be a minor crook."

He said Agnew was a "con-man" who he didn't think should be dignified by the publicity surrounding his resignation.

Galbraith said the vice-president's resignation had no lasting effect on the stock market.

"I would hate to think the stock market would depend on anyone as feeble as Mr. Agnew," he said.

Car Prices To Fall

PRAGUE (AP) — The government has ordered car prices to be slashed and waiting lists abolished Oct. 15, the Czechoslovak press agency CTK announced Friday. This means Czech-made autos will be cheaper by 18.5 per cent and Soviet vehicles by 10 per cent. Czechoslovakia is the first Communist country which has satisfied its internal demand for cars.

To Hang or Not to Hang Debate Resumes

OTTAWA (CP) — Rene Vaillancourt, a slightly-built Montrealer, became a "somebody" in February when he killed a Toronto policeman in the course of a bank robbery.

Vaillancourt, 28, when sentenced to death two weeks ago, became the leading character in the latest chapter of Canada's continuing capital-punishment controversy.

Parliament resumes Monday, and the main trust of early Commons debate will include the death penalty as MPs try again to decide on reinstatement of a partial ban on hanging.

The issue is whether to extend the five-year moratorium on capital punishment for all but the killers of on-duty policemen or prison guards. The previous ban, introduced late in 1967, expired at the end of 1972 and the old law that premeditated murder is punishable by death has been back in force since then. But all murder sentences since 1962 have been commuted to life imprisonment, and this practice undoubtedly will be continued until the House makes its decision.

A vote against the bill that has been before the Commons since January would be a vote for retention of hanging because, if the proposed Criminal Code amendment is defeated, pre-1967 law stays in effect.

The last persons hanged in Canada were two men at Toronto's Don Jail in 1962. Since those hangings there have been 47 commutations. At present, there are three men under sentence of death in Canadian prisons, including Vaillancourt, whose sentence is subject to automatic appeal.

The others are Real Chartrand, another 28-year-old Montrealer, and Gary John McNamara, 21, of Orillia, Ont.

Chartrand, sentenced to hang last April, shot a policeman after a credit union holdup in the Montreal suburb of Ste. Therese. McNamara, being held at Haney, B.C., was sentenced to death last November after he was found guilty of killing a prison guard during an attempted escape in June, 1972, from a jail in Alexis, B.C.

The death penalty has been a Commons issue since 1966 and the subsequent 7½ years have been turbulent for MPs.

The 1966 debate was on a motion to abolish capital punishment and it was defeated 143 to 112.

Eighteen months later, Prime Minister Lester Pearson's Liberal government brought in a bill to abolish hanging and the first five-year partial moratorium was approved 105 to 70.

Second reading of the bill now before the House, approval in principle, carried 138 to 114 in May and the third-reading vote, the last step before Senate approval and royal assent, could be even closer.

Before the third-reading vote, however, two other amendments have to be dealt with during the report stage of the bill. These have been approved by the justice committee.

One, by Albanie Morin (L—Louis-Bebert), suggests the rope for rapists or kidnappers who kill their victim. The other, by Allan Lawrence (PC—Northumberland - Durham), calls for execution of second-time murderers or aircraft hijackers who kill.

Mrs. Morin's is before the House now while Mr. Lawrence's has yet to be discussed. Mr. Lawrence is a former Ontario justice secretary.

The vote on the main bill is to be free of party ties.

Solicitor-General Warren Allmand, obviously against capital punishment as is Prime Minister Trudeau, says restoration of the rope is a retrograde step for civilization.

"How does this protect society?" he asked in an impassioned Commons speech before the House rose for the summer.

He said society should drop its eye-for-an-eye outlook and get at the root of the problem — the social backgrounds that result in murder.

Their Interest Is in Money, Not Managing

OAKLAND (AP) — The sands are running out on black men aspiring to the role of major league baseball manager and the blacks are mainly to blame, says an old-time Negro player.

"Not since the days of Jackie Robinson have we had a black player who really relates to the people," said Joe Black, a bus company executive from Phoenix, Ariz., who used to pitch for Brooklyn Dodgers.

Black tendered his views on the eve of the opening game of the World Series. The best-of-seven playoff between Oakland Athletics and the New York Mets was scheduled to open today with the second game on tap Sunday.

"Even black fans have begun to take the black stars for granted, and nothing is done about it. Take pro basketball. Willis Reed and Walt Frazier are always going to the neighborhoods and fraternizing with the kids. Football players do the same thing.

"But the baseball guys? They say, 'Okay, how much money is in it for me?'"

Black—who played for Elite Giants in the old Negro League before moving into organized baseball via Montreal Royals, the old farm club of the Dodgers, and then with Brooklyn and Cincinnati—said he thought Junior Gilliam, an old Brooklyn teammate now a coach with Los Angeles Dodgers, would have had a manager's job long ago.

"But Walt Alston, I see, just signed another one-year contract," Black said. "Gilliam has been with the team longer than Alston—21 years now—and waiting for the big break. He might as well quit thinking about it."

Black, a former school teacher, said of all the black prospects, Gilliam possesses the best credentials for a manager's job.

"I remember when we got two bucks apiece for playing a game in the Negro Leagues, Gilliam would borrow my money to go to the stadium to see the Yankees. He would watch every move the infielders made and he'd study the hitters by the hour.

"He knows as much baseball as any man I know—black or white—and he has the toughness and the faculty for demanding respect that it takes to be a leader."

Black said he regarded Frank Robinson as the next-best-qualifiel black managerial prospect.

"But when is he going to get a chance? Time is running out."

Black said Willie Mays, retiring this year as a Met, and Ernie Banks, former Chicago Cubs' star, are too outgoing for such a job.

"Can you imagine either one chewing out a guy for carousing all night?" he said. "Besides, Banks has been shuffled off to a job in the Cubs' farm system. He might as well pull out, too."

Black had these other assessments:

Of Elston Howard, former Yankee catcher being mentioned as a possible replacement for Ralph Houk: "I don't think so. Ellie never liked to consider himself one of the blacks, anyhow. He didn't mingle with us much."

Of Larry Doby, the first black to play in the American League and now a coach at Montreal with the Expos: "He'd be okay, but his wife wouldn't let him. Too much stress."

Of Maury Wills, the ex-Dodger now a broadcaster: "I thought he might be a good manager until I heard him talk on television. Now I don't."

Business: They're Not Laughing at Gary Now

One week, and the most interesting yarn has to be the planned intrusion of Gary Davidson into the football business. For a fellow who never saw a professional hockey game before he organized the World Hockey Association, Davidson now has all the football moguls, both in Canada and the United States, jumping, and looking to their futures.

Davidson said on the fely that to him it was strictly business — the cities are available, there is a surplus of players, and the economics of the possibilities interest him. Besides, why not put football teams in Japan and London, or other European cities? Certainly he can't be faulted for what he has done in recent years. He was one of the founders of the American Basketball Association and when people laughed at him again, when he talked of a rival league to the National Hockey League, he remained to laugh last and loudest.

But now it's football, and obviously much of the groundwork already has been laid — Davidson wouldn't have been as postive, if it hadn't, and where that will leave the Canadian Football League remains to be seen. Certainly some of the clubs must be worried, because even Jackie Parker of the B.C. Lions has admitted he realizes there is room for a third major league. Besides, Davidson also said his committee is working on rule changes. One is very interesting, and it wouldn't be surprising if the NFL and CFL consider it at their next rules session. This is to bring the ball back to the line of scrimmage on unsuccessful field-goal attempts and turn it over to the other side. Makes sense. And the way he says it, he's selling a business, not a game. And if he didn't think it would sell, he wouldn't be doing it.

Things won't be the same around the Victoria Golf Club any more. Phil Taylor died last week. To him golf was a game to be enjoyed by one and all. He didn't try to promote everyone into a championship player. His was more a kindly philosophy, or as former golf columnist Harry Young, put it so well. "Phil was more of a healer than anything else, especially in his latter years. He could spot mistakes immediately, and he would offer his advice to fit the individual. Just a few days ago he spotted me on the tee; I had been having trouble with my game, didn' know the problem, and when Phil saw me swing, he said just three words. That day I went out and cut 10 strokes of my score."

Honesty and wry wit were two of his trademarks. To paraphrase what the minister said at his funeral service this week: This lady had been taking lesson from Phil and when she figured it was about time to buy some new clubs she asked Phil his advice. "You have four clubs now; I think that is all you will need," he answered. Sure, he had lost a sale, but he had gained another friend. That was Phil Taylor.

Three years ago it was written here the B.C. Lions would prove to be one of the most innovative of CFL clubs. Immediate replays of the action below would be shown on the wide screen at the south end of Empire Stadium, Everything was set, the giant screen constructed, advertising contacted . . . but then "poof" the CFL said no. In effect, there was the worry it might show up the officials. How times have changed. On this night on that big screen there will be replays, the same replays seen on the TV screen, and thus another first, a little late, but still a first. And now the Stadium fan will get for his entertainment dollar what the home viewer has been getting for nothing all these years. It will be a novel experiment, and maybe even the officials will sneak a peek. Why not. It will be to their benefit as well.

Otherwise, many of the names were the same, only the positions were changed. It was a different view from behind the glass on the opening draw of "A" squad at the Victoria Curling Club, this week. Dick Samson was throwing third rocks for Pat Thompson, Gary Leibel was acting as vice-skip for Jackie Trueman, Ken Sturrock was third man for Keith Dagg and Lloyd Larson showed up with three youngsters on the front end — Steve Skillings, Murray Walker and Charlie McDiarmid. Thought that those young Swedish players, Borge Salming and Inge Hammarstrom, showed up well for Toronto Wednesday, that the Buffalo defence was weak, and hear that wrestler Gene Kiniski has a budding football star in the family. His son, Kelly, is 6'2", weighs 215, wears size 14 shoes, is only 15 years of age and a highschool student in Blaine.

When Dale Tallon, ex-Vancouver, reported to Chicago Black Hawks he was given No. 9, Bobby Hull's old number. Now he has given it back. Obviously it didn't fit. G'nite all.

JODY'S TALLIES WEREN'T ENOUGH

Jody Hunter scored three goals for the University of Victoria Friday but they weren't quite enough to put the host team in a strong position after the first day in the Canada West University Athletic Association women's field hockey championships.

Miss Hunter scored the only UVic goal when the University of Alberta snatched a 2-1 victory and then she got both goals as UVic held Calgary to a 2-2 tie.

The defending-champion University of British Columbia squad, which edged Calgary 1-0, and Alberta entered the second day of the three-day tourney with the best records. Both had one victory each and then they battled to a scoreless draw in the last game of the day.

Sue Seaborne and Debbie Crawford scored for Alberta against UVic while Nancy Elias got both goals for Calgary Calgary in the tied game.

Debbie Taylor scored the goal in UBC's win over Calgary.

Games continued today and the final matches in the double-round-robin tournament are set for Sunday at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. at UVic.

Improved Seals Stamp a Mark On Black Hawks

By The Canadian Press

Early in October when California Golden Seals were training in Kingston, Ont., coach Fred Glover insisted his team would show improvement in the National Hockey League this season.

"We'll be much better on attitude alone," said Glover, also executive vice-president and general manager of the Seals.

Who can argue with him after two games?

The Seals moved to an unfamiliar position Friday night, first place in the Western Division, with a 3-2 decision over Chicago Black Hawks, their second straight victory of the young season. Wednesday night, the Seals edged St. Louis Blues 2-1.

In another game Friday, Pittsburgh Penguins won their season opener by defeating Atlanta Flames 4-3.

Left winger Joey Johnston scored a goal, his second of the year, and picked up two assists to lead the Seals against the Hawks.

California led 2-0 after the first period and increased its lead to 3-1 entering the third. One of Chicago's goals was scored by Pit Martin, his 199th in 11 seasons.

The Seals, incidentally, had a win and a tie after their first games last year. They won their second Oct. 27.

"Last season was a write-off," said Glover when he recently assessed his team. "The trouble started between the coach . . . and the owner. When I took over, the players were in a muddle and never got straightened away.

"Now it is a new ball game. The players know where they stand. . . ."

Al McDonough, who scored seven times in five games against the Flames in 1972-73, scored the winning goal with 13 seconds remaining in the second period after taking a pass from Lowell MacDonald.

MAKING BID for fifth victory in Picadilly world match-play golf tournament in England, veteran South African Gary Player (above) was facing Australian Graham Marsh in 36-hole final today. Player ousted U.S. Open champion Johnny Miller Friday by 3-and-2 count while Graham was upsetting defending champion Tom Weiskopf 4 and 3. Today's winner will receive $25,000.

ARMSTRONG NEAR RECORD

DETROIT (AP) — When linesman Neil Armstrong steps on the ice Tuesday night, he'll set a record for most games worked by a National Hockey League official.

Armstrong, native of Sarnia, Ont., will be honored by the league before the game between Detroit Red Wings and St. Louis Blues.

Bryan O'Neil, executive director of the NHL, will make a presentation to the linesman just before Armstrong's 1,314th game.

Former linesman George Hayes holds the record of 1,313.

Rochester Misses Ice

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — For the second time in three years, lack of ice will prevent Rochester Americans of the American Hockey League from staging their season home opener.

The Americans were scheduled to face Richmond in War Memorial Stadium Sunday, but parts for the new ice-making equipment ordered this summer did not arrive.

Bench-Clearing Brawl Mars Saints' Victory

By The Canadian Press

Jim Harrison and Wayne Connelly don't believe in wasting time, especially where goals and assists are concerned in the World Hockey Association.

The 26-year-old Harrison, who set a WHA points record of 10 in one game last season, scored three times Friday night as Edmonton Oilers opened their regular-season schedule with a 6-4 win at home over Winnipeg Jets.

Harrison, the leading scorer for the Oilers last year with 87 points including 39 goals, also picked up an assist, while linemate Ron Climie scored once and added three assists.

At Minnesota, the Fighting Saints nipped Vancouver Blazers 5-4 with Connelly picking up a goal and three assists. Last season, Connelly led the Saints with 40 goals and 30 assists in 78 league games.

Harrison, native of Bonnyville, Alta., put the insurance goal for the Oilers into an empty net with 25 seconds remaining. Climie, playing his first game as an Oiler, set up Harrison for the opening goal at 8:17 of the first period.

In St. Paul, Minn., the Saints held a 4-1 lead midway through the second period then hung on for their win over the Blazers before 6,285 spectators.

Connelly figured in three power-play goals in the wide-open game, which featured a bench-clearing incident in the third period when Gordie Gallant of the Saints and Jim Cardiff of the Blazers tangled.

Coach Harry Neale of the Saints and playing-coach Johnny McKenzie were both ejected from the game for their part in the affair at 18:47, McKenzie getting a game misconduct.

The Saints outshot the Blazers 51-33, including 23-13 in the second period.

Mike Walton, formerly with Boston Bruins of the NHL, got a goal and an assist for the Saints. Danny Lawson, who led in the WHA in goals last season with 61, scored once for the Blazers.

Boxer Netminder Shackles Vikings

Alert goalkeeping by Ed Hastings Friday night enabled London Boxing Club to score its first victory of the Vancouver Island Hockey League season.

Hastings turned away 27 shots to earn his shutout as the Boxers downed University of Victoria Vikings 2-0 at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Bob Holness and Rick De Roo both scored in the second period for the Boxing Club.

CFB Esquimalt Buccaneers also recorded their first win of the season when they defeated Ingraham Buckaroos of the Victoria Intermediate Hockey League 4-1 in an interlocking game, also at the Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Jim Countryman, John Kirkpatrick, Ray Tallefer and Ozzie Bechtold scored for the CFB team while Neil Stanley got the Ingraham goal.

Lion Fans Finally Get Instant Replays

By The Canadian Press

The scrambling for the last playoff spot is shaping up as the most interesting battle in the Western Football Conference and action this weekend is crucial to the outcome.

Edmonton Eskimos and Saskatchewan Roughriders are above that morass, both teams being almost guaranteed of at least the playoffs. The only undecided aspect of their performance is which one will finish first.

The Riders, going into their Sunday game in Winnipeg against the Blue Bombers, have a one-point lead with 16 points over the Eskimos who play British Columbia Lions Saturday night in Vancouver.

But Calgary Stampeders have an insecure hold on third place with the Lions and Blue Bombers snapping at their heels.

Calgary has 10 points on five wins and seven losses, three more points than the Bombers and Lions who share the cellar with only three wins and a tie each.

Winnipeg and B.C. both have their work cut out for them in tangling with the West's two top clubs, but Calgary has a big challenge of their own in playing the tough Ottawa Rough Riders in Calgary Sunday.

Calgary Coach Jim Duncan probably will give the nod to quarterback Peter Liske who has an injured hand.

The Stampeders also could be missing two top defensive players, middle linebacker Steve Brown and tackle Fred James.

Ottawa reports only one serious injury, to quarterback Jerry Keeling who has rib troubles. Rick Cassata likely will get the starting assignment.

Fans in Vancouver's Empire Stadium will really get a chance to analyse the action.

The Lions finally got permission to use a giant television screen mounted on the scoreboard to show fans in the stadium instant replays of crucial action.

CFL officials at first balked at allowing the screen to be used, but have finally given the go-ahead.

The Eskimos have lost their last three games in Empire Stadium. But the Lions are having troubles and will be hard pressed to hold off the powerful Eskimos.

B.C. will be without their greatest offensive threat in fullback Johnny Musso who has stretched knee ligaments. Lou Harris, released last week, has been reactivated to fill in for Musso.

King Pele Plans To Play for Free

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP)—Pele, the king of soccer and a national hero in Brazil, is going through with his announced plans to retire.

Stressing that he has already achieved all an athlete could hope for, Pele says that a year from now he will just be Edson Arantes do Nascimento—industrialist, father and husband.

Pele, who will be 33 Oct. 23, played his last game as a professional Wednesday, scoring one goal and leading Santos to a 3-0 victory over Sergipe in a Brazilian League match.

His contract with Santos—the only team of his 17-year career—expired Friday. But he will continue to wear the familiar No. 10 jersey on special occasions, playing for free.

He plans to accept invitations to participate in farewell and benefit matches whenever possible in the next year.

"By accepting these invitations," Pele said, "I will be able to thank the millions of my fans all over the world for all the support they have provided me with."

In additon, Pele will donate the salary he received from the Santos club in his final year to charity unions of that city. Extra bonuses he received for playing special games will be offered to the club.

Pele announced his retirement plans July 18, 1971, before a cheering throng of 150,000 at Maracana Stadium and millions of other soccer fans watching on television.

Pele was the first pro soccer player to score 1,000 goals. He played in four World Cups, helping Brazil win three of them. He is the youngest player ever to take part in, and win, a World Cup championship match, helped Brazil beat Sweden 5-2 in 1958 when he was only 17 years old.

Pats Finally Connect; Cougars Face Kamloops

By The Canadian Press

Regina Pats, who had scored only four goals in two previous games, erupted for four goals in the first period Friday night to trounce Swift Current Broncos 6-1 in a Western Canada Hockey League game.

The 1,963 hometown fans saw Pats take their first win in three starts but the victory left them in the Eastern Division's cellar with only two points, one behind Swift Current and Winnipeg.

In other Friday night games Brandon Wheat Kings downed the Clubs 6-2 at Winnipeg and the Blades edge New Westminster Bruins 2-1 at Saskatoon.

At Regina, Bill Bell led the Pats with two goals, both in the first period and just 34 seconds apart. Other Regina goals went to Rob Laird, Drew Callander, Rich Uhrich and Dennis Sobchuk.

Ed Staniowski's bid for a shutout in the Regina net was ended when David George got the Broncos goal at 11:05 of the third period.

Don Larway and Gary Wagner scored both Winnipeg's goals in the second period, getting by Brandon goaltender Jim Rankin.

LEAFS SLICE ROSTER; TEST TOTEMS MONDAY

Victoria Maple Leafs have made their final cuts in preparation for Monday night's Pacific International Junior Hockey League game against Seattle Totems at Memorial Arena.

That leaves coach Al Grier with 17 players, including two goalies.

Cut were defenceman Ross McKinstry and forwards Larry Perepolkin, Larry Donaldson and Lance Hobbs.

Grier will go with five defencemen and 10 forwards. Among the defencemen is Tom Dohan, who came to camp as a right winger but was moved back to the blueline.

"He's been turning in a whale of a performance in all three games we've played," said Grier, "so we're going to keep him back there. He has speed and can carry the puck out.

Leafs have one win, a 5-4 decision over Surrey Stampeders, and two losses in league play. Monday's faceoff is 8 p.m.

Mt. Doug Held to Draw

Reynolds came back with equalizing goals three times Friday and held Victoria High School Soccer League—leading Mt. Douglas to a 3-3 draw.

Playing on its home field made muddy by a steady rain, Mt. Doug shot into an early lead on a goal by Craig Palin only to see Greg Booth get the equalizer just before the interval.

Mt. Doug again went into the lead early in the second half when Joe Achadinha scored but Booth got his second goal to make it 2-2.

Al Grey put Mt. Doug ahead for a third time but Howie Kirk scored the 3-3 goal 10 minutes from the end. It was the 17th goal of the season for Kirk, who lead the league scoring.

The result left Reynolds three points behind Mt. Doug and one point ahead of idle Claremont.

In Friday's other games, Mount View crushed Belmont 8-1, Esquimalt blanked the new Parklands school 2-0 to stay tied for fourth place, and Vic High downed Oak Bay 4-2.

Brad Clarke scored three times to lead the Mount View spree and the other goal-getters were Dale Marshall, Iggy Kadar, Mark Kline, Sam Bender and Bob Cool. Lawrie Johnston scored for Belmont.

Playing its best game of the season, Parkland held Esquimalt scoreless until the last few minutes in the evening game at Royal Athletic Park but Peter Barton and Dale Roberts both came up with late goals to sink the Sidney school.

Mike Mulholland scored twice and Tony Lee once as Vic High carved out a 3-0 lead by early in the second half but visiting Oak Bay came back with goals by Robbie Parris and Dave Martin. Vic High got its fourth goal when goalkeeper Jim de Goede's goalkick was deflected into the net by an Oak Bay defender.

Canucks Want Bonus Back

EDMONTON (CP) — Vancouver Canucks have asked Keith Mackie to return a $20,000 signing bonus he has already spent on a new home for his parents.

The Canucks asked for the money back after National Hockey League officials ruled that Mackie, a six-foot, six-inch defenceman, would not be allowed to play in the league because of an eye injury he suffered two years ago.

Mackie, a standout with Edmonton Oil Kings of the Western Canada League last season, was a fourth-round draft choice last June, signed a three-year contract with the Canucks and accepted the signing bonus.

But right now he's sitting at home with a clouded future, taking steps to keep his signing bonus and receive the full payment stipulated in his contract with Vancouver.

Mackie was struck in the eye by a deflected puck in a Memorial Cup game in Ottawa two years ago. A clause in the standard NHL contract forbids players with inferior vision to play in the NHL or in any minor league sponsored by the NHL.

"I have contacted my agent, Harry Ottenbright of Denver, and he has been in touch with Campbell (NHL president Clarence Campbell) and the Canucks informing them we plan to file suit in order to ensure the contract will be paid in full," Mackie said in an interview.

He argues that he signed the contract following his fourth workout with the Canucks and after obtaining medical clearance from team doctors.

But the NHL, in a telegram to the Canucks, says Mackie has less than 3-60ths vision in the one eye.

Mackie, who played all but the first two weeks of last season and had no apparent problems with the eye, said:

"There are certain things on an eye chart that I can't see with the one eye because of a small blind spot I have right in the middle. But I can see everything around it.

"They've sent me to see all sorts of doctors and every one I went to told me they could see no reason why I couldn't play.

"They all agreed I could play . . . that there was nothing wrong with my vision that would hurt my hockey."

It's the Hornets In Juvenile Final

Deprived of full credit after a spectacular victory in the semi-final round of Vancouver Island Juvenile Football League playoffs, Saanich Chew Hornets have received another jolt.

Hornets will be without the services of quarterback Dave Kirzinger, who was injured in a scrub football game at school, when they tackle league-champion Oak Bay Farmers in the sudden-death final next Wednesday.

Gord Mahoney is scheduled to take over Kirzinger's post and is expected to build the Hornet attack around running backs Sean Flynn and Kerry Lacroix.

Newspaper reports earlier this week stated that James Bay Mustangs had won the semi-final battle, but it was the Hornets who came out on top, exploding for four touchdowns in an overtime session to down the Mustangs 53-31.

Farmers can be expected to again present a well-balanced squad in the final, with quarterback Rick Jones aiming many of his passes at Evan Jones and giving considerable work to running backs Bill Green and Ron Smith.

Kickoff time for the final at Royal Athletic Park is 8 p.m.

Game Club Meets Monday

Members of the Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association will hold their monthly meeting Monday at 8 p.m. in the clubhouse at Goldstream Flats.

The club bulletin had erroneously announced Oct. 22 as the date of the meeting, which will include a presentation of slides on the West Coast Trail by Angus McGregor.

Whitworth Leads Tucson Tourney

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Kathy Whitworth knocked in an eagle and five birdies for a four-under-par 69 and the first-round lead Friday in the $35,000 Ladies' Professional Golf Association tournament.

Miss Whitworth held a one-stroke lead over Gail Denenberg.

Miss Whitworth, who is leading money winner on the tour so far this year, said her hot putting gave her confidence. She sank two curving 25-footers in the round.

Miss Denenberg was the early first-round leader, but Miss Whitworth recovered from a double bogey with birdies on the 16th and 18th holes to take the lead.

Miss Denenberg birdied the seventh, eighth, 10th and 12th holes but had a bogey five on the second.

Gloria Ehret, Laura Baugh, Gerdz Boykin, Sue Roberts and Murle Breer were tied for

Canadian Combination Fairs Poorly

MELBOURNE (CP) — Marilyn Palmer of Vancouver and Dale Shaw of Victoria were far back in the field in the Australian women's foursome golf championship Friday.

The event was won by Australians Jane Lock and Gayle Flynn with a 36-hole score of 151. The Canadians' gross score was 162.

Yancey in Front; Knudson Fires Ace

INZAI, Japan (Reuter) — Bert Yancey of the United States soared to a two-over-par 73 today but still clung to a one-stroke lead after the third round of the $300,000 Taiheiyo masters golf tournament.

Gene Littler of the U.S. and Toru Nakamura and Masashi Ozaki of Japan were next with a 209 total.

Littler had a four-under 67.

Lu Liang Huan of Taiwan, second overnight, slipped back to third place with a 73 and a total of 210.

Dave Stockton with a 67, had 210, while Lee Elder and Billy Casper were one stroke further back. All are U.S. golfers.

Yancey's 208 total is three under par for 54 holes.

George Knudson of Toronto, who won a $2,000 special prize Friday by scoring a hole-in-one, shot a 72 today and was in a tie for 12th place with a three-round total of 213.

Knudson's ace helped him score a four-under-par 67, moving him up to a tie for 14th place after the second round of the tournament. His 36-hole total on the 7187-yard, par-71 Sobu Country Club course was 141.

Yancey, a regular on the United States pro golf tour, had an opening-round 65 and a one-under 70 on Friday.

Knudson scored his hole-in-one on the 174-yard, par-three sixth hole.

"It was the 11th hole-in-one of my pro career," said Knudson, who used a five-iron for his ace. "A hole-in-one is not unusual for me — but receiving prize money is."

Knudson also shared $2,000 with Ozaki and Hsieh for the low score of the day.

Forrest Fezler, who had a first-round 67, ballooned to 76 Friday and was in a group at 143. Defending-champion Gay Brewer shot his second 72 and was tied at 144 with Bruce Crampton.

Trading Halted In Texasgulf

NEW YORK (CP) — The New York Stock Exchange suspended trading Friday in Texasgulf Inc. shares pending clarification of the circumstances surrounding the tender offer by Canada Development Corp. Trading also was suspended on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Trading was permitted just before the closing bell at New York and 60,000 shares changed hands at $30.50, down 38 cents from Thursday's close.

The NYSE said an inquiry conducted Thursday "indicates that a dispute exists with respect to the right to withdraw shares of Texasgulf Inc. tendered through Oct. 5 and not withdrawn prior to the close of business on Wednesday, Oct. 10."

The NYSE said it was its understanding that no request for the withdrawal of such shares received after the close of business Wednesday will be honored.

"Consequently, an undeterminable amount of trading that took place on Thursday . . . may have been trading that would not have taken place had the dispute not existed.

"This same dispute may give rise to a significant amount of such trading after the market in Texasgulf reopens."

The NYSE said "a possible significant portion of trading in Texasgulf Thursday, and after trading is allowed to reopen, may result from the dispute and not from any developments and projections affecting Texasgulf itself."

Texasgulf was the second most heavily traded issue on the NYSE Thursday, gaining 2⅜ points to $30⅞. Sales of the issue totalled 314,700.

CDC said Thursday it had purchased 8,275,000 shares at $29 a share tendered before Oct. 5 and not withdrawn by U.S. shareholders as of the close of business Wednesday.

In acquiring the 30 per cent interest in Texasgulf, CDC has pulled off its most ambitious coup to date and now has effective management control.

Moving quickly after extended court delays, CDC spent nearly $240 million to get the 8,275,000 shares.

This fell short of the corporation's goal of 10 million shares at $29 a share set out in its original purchase offer in late July and continued through two court battles that held up consummation of any sale.

The final hours of the CDC offer Friday were clouded with some of the apparent bitterness and uncertainty that marked the deal from the outset.

A CDC spokesman, commenting on the stock exchange suspension, said he "really didn't understand" the reasons.

A spokesman for Schroder Trust Co., of New York, handling the CDC tender offer, said many cables, letters and telephone calls had been received from shareholders seeking to withdraw their tenders made through Oct. 5.

Texasgulf directors and officers had attempted to block the Canadian corporation's takeover bid in the courts, arguing that it violated U.S. anti-trust laws and could possibly injure U.S. national interest and stockholders of the firm.

TRYING HARD for new image, Parti Quebecois leader Rene Levesque has cut his cigarette smoking down to one every 15 minutes. Advisers called the shot because in TV addresses viewers had to peer through smokescreen to see the chain-smoking speaker.

P.Q. Budget Plan 'Illusory'

MONTREAL (CP) — The Parti Quebecois budgetary blueprint was back in the Quebec election spotlight Friday, with Premier Robert Bourassa calling it proof that Rene Levesque's party is proposing "a completely illusory economic sovereignty."

Mr. Bourassa told a meeting in Lachute the budget does not answer objections he posed six years ago to Mr. Levesque's proposal for an independent Quebec.

The budget, released earlier this week and covering the hypothetical first year of an independent Quebec, proved the Parti Quebecois would risk French Quebec's cultural future for an illusion of economic sovereignty, he said.

Mr. Levesque told a meeting in Sorel that Mr. Bourassa's criticism was the comment of "an enraged mouse."

The Parti Quebecois leader has previously used the label of mouse for Mr. Bourassa during the campaign for the Oct. 29 provincial general election. Premier Dave Barrett of British Columbia said earlier the Quebec government is "a government of white mice."

Mr. Levesque said the budget, which predicts a $181.5 million surplus for the first year of an independent Quebec, was the result of months of effort by his party, equivalent to the work of an established government.

Premier Bourassa said he has two main criticisms of the budget; a Quebec currency would be disastrous and the budget's forecasts for government income are based on "delirious optimism."

There was always difficulty in gaining confidence for a new currency and a post-independence flight of capital from the province would force devaluation of a Quebec currency.

The Parti Quebecois call for monetary union with Canada after independence is inconsistant, Mr. Bourassa said. A federal parliament would be needed to administer such a union.

He said Jacques Parizeau, Parti Quebecois economist who prepared the budget, was unrealistic in his prediction of more rapid economic growth than in the current year, which Mr. Bourassa described as the "greatest growth year in our history."

In other campaigning Friday, Parti Creditiste leader Yvon Dupuis lashed out at the French-language network of the CBC and the Liberal government.

He told about 500 persons in St. Pascal, 80 miles northeast of Quebec City, that his party is not getting fair exposure on television newscasts by Radio Canada. The Liberals regularly got three minutes on newscasts, the Union Nationale and Parti Quebecois two minutes each, "but there is no word of the Parti Creditiste."

Agent Played Financier

VANCOUVER (CP) — An RCMP officer played the role of a national financier interested in stolen securities to get evidence in the case of four men charged with conspiring to possess up to a possible $2 million in allegedly stolen gilt-edged stocks, a B.C. Supreme Court jury was told Friday.

William Henry Lemmon, Frank Alexander Costello, Michael John Zaduk and Irwin Edward Schubert are accused in a trial before Mr. Justice A. A. Mackoff of conspiring between April 26 and May 13, 1971, to possess securities they are said to have known were stolen. The Crown claims the alleged conspiracy took place in Vancouver, Toronto, Hamilton and Guelph, Ont.

Vancouver lawyer John Hall, one of two prosecutors presenting the Crown's case, told the jury Crown evidence to be called will purport to show how an RCMP undercover officer teamed with a Vancouver stock salesman in a police plan to go along with four men accused in an alleged scheme to purchase from the men a large amount of "hot or warm" securities.

The masquerade of the RCMP officer, described as a senior member of the force, came to a sudden end in Guelph when one of the four men said to have been involved in the scheme allegedly told the "financier" he had a feeling he had seen him somewhere else, Hall said in outlining the Crown's case to the jury. He added that arrests were made immediately.

The Crown lawyer said evidence will be called seeking to show the stock salesman received a phone call and went to an office building in downtown Vancouver where he met a man who asked if he was interested in disposing of some securities.

Grant to Pay For Violinist

A $1,000 Canada Council grant has been awarded to the Victoria Symphony Orchestra to help finance appointment of violinist-in-residence Bryan King.

King arrived earlier this fall from England, along with the symphony's new concert master, Harry Cawood, and his wife, cellist Mary.

The grant was part of more than $370,000 in Canada Council grants awarded to 16 music organizations, including $160,000 for the National Arts Centre Orchestra.

A SENSE OF SHOCK is expressed by Gloria Peyton when confronted with what every woman wears but does not usually leave lying around in a fur salon. Protection Extended

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Coast Guard hovercraft has gone on extra duty to the end of November to assist commercial fishermen in cases of emergency, the ministry of transport said Thursday.

This will be the third year in a row that special arrangements have been made to ensure the safety of fishermen operating at the mouth of the Fraser River and into the river itself, under special extended fishing regulations granted by the provincial government.

The extended hovercraft duty will end about November 30, when the normal fishing season closes for the winter.

OBSCURE HARRIS PAINTINGS EMERGE

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — More than a score of unidentified or lost paintings by the late Robert Harris, probably Canada's foremost portrait painter, have been traced as a result of a current cross-country tour of his works.

Moncreif Williamson, director of the Confederation art gallery and museum in Charlottetown, who put the exhibit together, said most of the lost works probably are in people's attics, or hanging on corporation board room walls, unknown to the present generation.

Harris, who died in 1919 at 70, painted a celebrated and widely reproduced group portrait of the Fathers of Confederation. The original was destroyed in the 1916 fire that gutted the Centre Block on Parliament Hill.

His best known work other than formal potraiture is A Meeting of the School Trustees, in the National Gallery here.

Mr. Williamson, who became director of the Charlottetown gallery in 1964, moving from the art gallery of Victoria, B.C., found 300 to 400 Harris paintings and drawings in the basement of the Charlottetown post office; and "darn near 100 of them were non-salvagable," he said.

There also were notebooks, engagement calendars, and a collection of photographs Harris made of his paintings as an inventory. Many of these photographs have been matched with known Harris paintings, but more than 100 of them were either unidentified or the present whereabouts of the paintings unknown.

The National Gallery issued a catalogue of the unknown works.

SOME TRACED

"Fifteen to 20 of them have been traced, and I suspect more since I have been away from Charlottetown," Mr. Williamson said in an interview here.

"We'll never find them all, but we are optimistic. One woman living in retirement in Montreal has been writing to a number of people she thinks might have Harris portraits.

"We are also finding many Harris landscapes. He did many of them, but his main work was portraiture."

The School Trustees, painted in 1885, created a storm when it was shown the following year at the Royal Academy in London.

"There were such crowds around it that the area had to be roped off. I like to think of it as one of the first statements of women's lib."

The picture shows a young school teacher who, as Mr. Williamson said, "had the guts, the nerve and the audacity to speak up to those tough old Presbyterian trustees." Teachers still react to it today.

HAD COMMISSIONS

Harris did most of his work in Charlottetown but also worked on commissions in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and elsewhere.

Concerning the Fathers of Confederation masterwork, Mr. Williamson said:

"Poor old Harris was screwed by the department of public works, who commissioned the work. He didn't get the copyright, and when he came back to Ottawa after finishing it, he found copies and photographs of it spread all over the country."

Disaster Slams Viet Rice Crop

SAIGON (WP) — Rain and floods from Typhoon Opal have inflicted heavy damage on the vital October rice crop in South Vietnam's northern provinces, according to preliminary estimates.

Similar floods have occurred in past years without causing major hardships.

But because of a world-wide rice scarcity, limited supplies from the United States and a shortage elsewhere in South Vietnam, there is little margin for error this year.

Fragmentary reports reaching Saigon say that 70 per cent of the crop has been destroyed in some areas and perhaps 30 per cent of the anticipated harvest has been lost over-all in the coastal strip from Nha Trang north to the demilitarized zone.

In addition, large stocks of rice sent north from Saigon are reported damaged.

The crop loss comes at the worst possible time for South Vietnam, where a nation-wide rice shortage has already become the country's most important political issue and where officials were counting on the harvest from the northern provinces to forestall serious potential hardship there.

The South Vietnamese minister of economy said in July that typhoon damage to the October crop in the north was the one potential factor that could turn an administrative and economic problem—short rice supplies and rapidly rising prices—into outright hunger.

It is not yet known whether that has happened, but the social welfare ministry reported this week that it was sending emergency cash assistance to the five northernmost provinces.

Travellers returning from the north reported that large areas were inundated, and government officials said that high water and washed-out roads and bridges made a comprehensive crop loss estimate impossible.

An official in remote Phu Bon province, reached by telephone, reported massive damage to crops and dwellings there.

The area around Hue was also reported hard hit, with some families evacuated from the western foothills and others perched on roofs waiting for the waters to recede.

The highway from Hue to Quang Tri was reported cut, leaving refugees who are resettling Quang Tri isolated from government food stocks.

For westerners unfamiliar with Asia, it is difficult to comprehend the potential effect of a rice shortage in a country like this.

Rice is not just an important commodity, it is the staple of the diet, the essential daily food and sometimes the only food for millions of people.

The northern provinces, where a large population is wedged between the mountains and the sea, have never been self-sufficient in rice. They have relied heavily on supplements from the rice-rich provinces of the Mekong Delta and, in recent years, on imports from the United States.

No further shipments of U.S. rice are scheduled to arrive here until December. And for reasons that are not altogether clear, doubts have been raised about the ability of the delta to supply what the rest of the country needs.

All the statistics indicate that there is enough rice to go around and government officials, anxious to avoid speculation and hoarding, keep insisting there is no over-all shortage.

Watergate Pair Ask New Venue

NEW YORK (UPI) — John N. Mitchell and Maurice Stans asked Friday that their trial be shifted from New York to Aberdeen, Miss., because a poll showed that fewer people in the southern city thought them guilty.

An independent poll of five cities showed that Aberdeen was the place where the least prejudiced jury could be selected, defence attorney Peter Fleming said in a motion in U.S. district court.

Disgusting Opulence Described

By JOHN SOOSAR

HALIFAX (CP) — "It was fabulous—everything you wanted, steak, wine, champagne, caviar and it was all free," she gushed to curious onlookers as she came down the gangplank of Queen Elizabeth 2 and entered the immigration pier 21 shed.

"We got on in New York and it was everything you ever dreamed of—Shaheen is the greatest."

She was among those disembarking to freshen up before the next round of dining aboard the world's most luxurious liner, all guests of New York developer John . Shaheen who had dreamed up this million dollar extravaganza to open his new refinery at Come-By-Chance, Nfld.

The big QE-2 steamed into this old port after the Come-By-Chance bash and a visit to the Strait of Canso in Nova Scotia where the Shaheen interests plan a second refinery and where one small sour note was introduced.

A group of students and professors presented the New York developer with a statement describing the cruise as "vulgar."

Mr. Shaheen is noted for doing things on a lavish scale, but this probably topped anything he had ever done.

But he doesn't want the press about—not in force at least.

STOOD AT GANGPLANK

A tight knot of reporters stood at the end of the gangplank shortly after the huge ship berthed where all the other Cunard queens had in the past, waiting for the politicians and the hangers-on to disembark so they could attend a plaque presentation and see the opulence for themselves.

"Mr. Shaheen will take only eight reporters and photographers," Jesse Taub, who described himself as "Shaheen's man"—public relations—told the reporters.

"He really doesn't want any reporters aboard but we'll take eight—do you want a pool set up?"

The cameramen, outnumbered the reporters so with a little adjustment eight reporters and photographers tramped aboard the liner and rode the elevator up five decks to the captain's cabin.

Drinks and tidbits were waiting and Capt. Mortimer Hehir, a 30-year veteran aboard Cunard ships, welcomed them.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaheen walked in—he in a shimmering navy tuxedo with the customary tiny white seals and she in a shimmering gown, embroidered in gold.

The ceremony could begin.

A plaque was presented to the captain by Port Commissioner Chairman J. W. E. Mingo who recalled that Samuel Cunard, who started the line, was born and lived his life in Halifax.

Then Mayor Walter Fitzgerald presented him with cufflinks from the City of Halifax.

And then Mr. Shaheen was invited under the lights to receive a print of the original schooner Bluenose in heavy seas.

As reporters were about to begin a short question period, invited by Mr. Shaheen, in walked Premier Gerald Regan accompanied by his wife and daughter.

All questions were off.

Mr. Regan had decided that it would be politically embarrassing to cruise up the Atlantic coast in lavish splendor so Mr. Shaheen arranged for a dinner aboard the liner for the premier with whom he is dealing to build another refinery.

VILLAGES HESITATE

FREDERICTON (CP) — Legislative changes which could push New Brunswick provincial grants for cities, towns and villages to a $30-million high next year are scheduled to come into effect Jan. 1 but some villages are still apprehensive about increased responsibilities they will bear under the plan.

Villages will take over street maintenance and police protection next year and about half the villages in the province might be forced to raise their local tax rates.

"They've resigned themselves to it as there's nothing they can do about it," said Alan Hicks, mayor of the village of Hampton and head of the village association. "Hopefully it will work out."

The chief architect of the new program is confident it will.

"I think they'll find it much better over the long haul," said E. G. Allen, deputy minister of municipal affairs and chairman of the group which laid the groundwork for the new program.

He said the province's unconditional grants to the cities, towns and villages could rise to $30 million next year, compared to about $20 million paid out by the province this year.

In addition, the province plans "stimulation grants" to help municipalities raise the level of their services. They could amount to $4 million to $5 million next year.

Allen believes many municipalities will be able to lower their tax rates because of the new package. It's based on a new Municipal Assistance Act passed during the spring session of the legislature.

The province's cities and towns seem generally happy with the package and the prospect of more assistance next year.

But there is still concern with a section of the new legislation which will give the province greater control of a municipality's budget if the municipality is in financial trouble.

$3,000 To Make Well Well

EDMONTON (CP) — The provincial government is willing to spend $3,000 to end the water-well feud between Jane Whipple and her neighbors in the Fort MacLeod district of arid southern Alberta.

The feud began six months ago when Mrs. Whipple, in her 70s, dismantled the well's pump because, she said, an invasion by water-hungry ranching neighbors was affecting the performance of her indoor plumbing.

The well, dug by the federal government during the Second World War, is located on land owned by Mrs. Whipple.

The neighbors formed the Fort Macleod Water Haulers' Co-Operative, flirted with the possibility of expropriation proceedings, then decided to drill their own well. That well struck water but unfortunately also reduced the water level in Mrs. Whipple's well, forcing her to siphon for supplies.

Magic Has Become Nothing Trip

WASHINGTON (WP) — First came the Davenport Brothers, who managed to ring bells and play banjos and guitars while securely tied in a cabinet. Kellar followed, generally pictured with a bunch of little imps whispering infernal secrets in his ear. Thurston took over from him and made a Shippet automobile filled with pretty girls disappear. Blackstone was next, sawing women in two and making handkerchiefs dance.

They were big magic, playing to everyone from Calvin Coolidge — who had his smashed watch reappear whole inside a loaf of bread — to the King of Burma — who watched from behind a screen — to just plain folks who squeezed their way into balcony seats and were amazed half to death. Magic meant something in those days, and now, mourns Ed Sparrow, people think differently of magic; they think it relates to children, it's something to perform at parties.

In the beginning, when the world was so new nothing had a name, everything was magic. When religion came along to try to explain things, magic was there to help. In ancient Egypt hidden tubing made it appear that stone idols could speak. In Greece and Rome magic produced strange happenings in front of holy altars, like pneumatic mechanisms which caused temple doors to open when fires were lit, and optical illusions which produced facsimiles of gods. The three wisemen who followed the star to Bethlehem were known as Magi, members of a near-eastern class of priests whose name is at the root of the very word magic.

In Europe early Magicians were vagabonds, carrying their tricks in their pockets. Eventually they moved onto stages and even into evening clothes, but well into modern times those who practiced the art were thought to have dealt with the devil to get their powers.

For centuries magic has fulfilled some kind of need to be baffled, but now, with science demystifying right and left, magic has been pushed out of the picture. All you have to do is look up in the sky and see an airplane fly, says Sparrow. To a kid that's magic. How can I beat that?

And so they seem far away, those days when magic was ever so important, when magicians were the biggest thieves in the world, when Harry Houdini forced his assistants to sign notarized oaths of secrecy, when a magician named Dante had his sawing-a-woman-in-half illusion stolen by men who worked all night to copy it piece by piece and get it back to his shop before he'd miss it in the morning.

Yet to Ed Sparrow, sitting in a suburban McLean, Va., garden apartment, this was the sweetest of times, a glossy golden age when the tricks were bigger, the audiences more appreciative, when magic was in the glory it deserved.

For Ed Sparrow is terribly obsessed with magic. "I sleep and eat it every day, sometimes I dream about it at night and when I wake up I make notes. It's like a bug, like taking a pill. I can really get deep into it."

An almost compulsive performer, he will say, "I could do a half-hour show out of stuff in my pockets." And he will promptly do one. Sometimes just talking about magic, about where it's been and what it's not now, gets him so worked up and agitated he starts packing back and forth, chopping the air with his hands, working himself into such a sweat he has to stop and ask, "Do you want a drink? I need one."

Sparrow runs a place called The Prop Truck out of a room of his apartment, one of less than 100 magic shops in the country.

JAIL FOR FRAUD

SURREY (CP) — A Hamilton, Ont., man has been sentenced to six months concurrent on each of eight fraud charges after pleading guilty to passing a series of worthless cheques in the B.C. lower mainland in 1972.

Victor Bruce Sagar, 24, had been sought on warrant after the charges were waived to Hamilton and he failed to appear to answer the charges.

The court was told that Sagar and his wife, Elizabeth McInnes Anderson, 25, passed worthless cheques totalling $264 in Surrey stores after the wife opened a bank account with $1.

His wife, who also pleaded guilty, was placed on one-year suspended sentence.

Sugar Price Talks Sour

GENEVA (Reuter) — The world's major importers and exporters of sugar were unable to reach agreement Friday on a new pricing system, well-informed sources said.

The sources said neither producers nor buyers were prepared to make concessions at last-minute discussions at the end of a United Nations conference intended to produce a new international agreement on the sugar trade.

The meeting was attended by the heads of delegations of Australia, Brazil, Canada, Cuba, Japan, the Soviet Union and UN officials.

Scouts Learned Every Mile Of Coast Trail

This summer 23 scouts biked the scenic 45-mile West Coast Trail from Bamfield to Port Renfrew.

Their eight-day trip, designed to develop young people and make them self-reliant, cost each boy $15, compared to $80 charged by another youth organization which sponsored a similar program.

The trip would not have been possible for some boys if it had not been for United Appeal funds available to the Greater Victoria regional Scout council.

The council absorbed some of the costs and volunteers footed the transportation bill.

The United Appeal permits hundreds of young people to participate in outdoor programs which are more important today than ever before due to rising urban social problems.

This year the association hopes to get $36,592 from the Appeal to pay its staff of four and operate Camp Barnard at Sooke.

The staff consists of Jack Serivener, executive director, Bob Muir, camp director, a stenographer and clerk.

The camp, believed to be one of the busiest in the province, is used all year by Scouts, Venturers and Rovers. Handicapped groups, as wel as schools, now use the centre for outdoor training programs.

The camp next August will be the site of a jamboree expected to attract 3,000 boys from all parts of B.C., the Yukon, Alaska, Washington, Oregon and California.

Britain is also sending two groups — one from Greenock, Scotland, and the other from Luten, Bedfordshire.

PARIS (AP) — The new Greek premier, Spyros Markezinis, says he will resign "if I don't succeed in organizing free elections at the earliest possible date." He said in an interview with Le Monde Friday: "In this matter, I have the full support of the president, Mr. (George) Papadopoulos."

YOUTH'S DAY IS DAWNING

Every country now has hundreds of youngsters who, if given the chance, could easily make the International rating. Many could reach the highest ranks. In the United States there is quite a remarkable group of youngsters who could give any of the well-known Grandmasters a run for their money. One who comes to mind is Larry Christiansen, 16, of Riverside, Calif., who won the U.S. junior championship in June and later represented the U.S. in the junior world championship in Teeside, England. There are many youngsters like Larry.

Youth has become involved on a large scale, something that was not true before Fisher-Spassky. This new breed takes everything in stride. They have the theoretical knowledge at their fingertips, have excellent feeling for middle game and are seasoned end-game players. All they lack is experience in fighting top players over the board. They are unafraid, daring and raring to play.

Eugenio Torre, a 22-year-old from the Philippines played in the Leningrad interzonal and in the fourth round beat veteran Mikhael Tal, USSR, the great favorite to win the event, knocking Tal out of contention.

Anatoly Karpov, USSR, is only 22, and the Russians see a great hope in him for the world title, though not before 1978. They feel he needs a lot of seasoning. Here is his battle against Jan Smejkal in the 16th round, which decided the entry to one of the Candidates' matches next year.

SWAMI BLUMFIELD, NEW GURU

By LEON DANIEL

PATNA, India (UPI) — Young Swami Blumfield was supposed to be a rabbi — at least that's what his father, a New York furrier, wanted — but instead he is wandering toward a Nepalese monestary at the foot of Mt. Everest.

Swami Blumfield?

"Well, first of all, you should write my name as Swami Ram Tirth," said Fred Jay Blumfield, a 27-year-old native of the Bronx.

He said his father was a manufacturer of ladies' coats.

"He's a multimillionaire. You can check it out. My parents live in Manhattan. They wanted me to be a rabbi."

(In New York, Blumfield's father confirmed that his son was in India, but said: "I don't want to talk about my son.")

Blumfield, 27, waited at Patna's small air strip in the middle of one of the most poverty-ridden areas of India. Dressed in rags and sporting an unruly black beard, he said he was on his way to Nepal.

"I'm going to a Tibetan monastery near Mt. Everest," he said. "Everything I'll tell you is the truth."

Blumfield said he was born in the Bronx and busted out of a military academy when he was 16. He took a job as a lifeguard in the Catskill Mountains, an area filled with Jewish resorts.

His parents gave him a trip to Israel, he said, and he went back to school, dropping out of the University of Miami after his sophomore year.

"I played freshman basketball there," said Blumfield, who looks not at all like an athlete now.

"They didn't like my sideburns," he said. "They wanted me to wear a white shirt and tie just because I was on the basketball team."

Blumfield, who said he studied sculpture in school, said he had spent a total of four of the last six years wandering around India studying under various gurus.

"I'm not into drugs," he said. He said he gave up marijuana at 17.

"I don't need drugs," he said. "For me, other things are happening."

Blumfield said he usually travels alone but he often meets other young travelers.

Blumfield said he did not evade the draft.

"Man, they didn't want me," he said. "My dad took me to the draft board. They didn't like my clothes. They thought I was crazy, I guess."

Labor Problems At U.S. Papers

NEW YORK (UPI) — The New York Times cancelled its early 50,000-copy city edition after its printers held a three-hour "chapel" meeting during working time Friday. It was the second work disruption of the day.

In Washington home delivery and final editions of the Washington Post were delayed this morning by a slowdown of members of Columbia Typographical Union 101, the paper said in a front-page apology to its readers.

United Way Praised By Health Minister

VANCOUVER (CP) — Provincial Health Minister Dennis Cocke told a labor-management seminar that volunteer agencies such as the United Way will always be essential to the community despite increasing government involvement in health and welfare.

"The funds and volunteer services provided by the United Way can backstop the government in fields such as preventive medicine, research and innovative programs, the government has neither the funds nor the staff to undertake," Cocke told 175 persons.

He said the government has tremendous respect for the United Way.

Time to Harvest Pear-Shaped Tones

By J. A. DAVIDSON

In a book on the ministry published a few years ago, Daniel Jenkins, an English theologian, offered this advice to fellow parsons:

"Any minister who has it pointed out to him by a candid friend that he is in danger of developing a clerical accent should immediately ask for a year's leave of absence and take a job as a cab-driver."

(Recently, while listening to a tape of one of my sermons, I had the uneasy feeling a couple of times that I should look under taxicabs in the yellow pages.)

Jenkins's advice came out of a brief discussion of "the widespread prevalence of a distinctive clerical accent" in British church circles, but he has spent some time in North America and he suggested that special clerical accents are not unknown on this side of the Atlantic.

Some of us do affect in our official speech overlays of what can be called "ecclesiastical unction", probably because we feel that it enhances our gentility and affirms our spirituality.

The minister who in ordinary conversation has a standard Canadian way of speaking may tend when officiating in church to become just a little careless with the terminal r, broaden the a just ever so, and add a flute-like throatiness to certain sounds.

He may tend to address the Almighty as Goe-d.

Some Canadian ministers, after periods of graduate study in Scotland, come home with a touch of the Edinburgh Holy Drone a tendency to give the r a bit of a soft roll and to show a trace of that rhythmic monotone favored by some Scottish preachers.

Others, who have spent some time in England or who have had English teachers in their theological colleges, acquire elements of the Oxford Liturgical Hoot—which sounds rather peculiar when laid on top of a flat Canadian voice.

Perhaps some of the subtle pressures to which the ministry is subject cause us to acquire professionally dainty modes of speech. This daintiness too easily becomes unctuousness.

In one of his novels Aldous Huxley has a clergyman whose voice is described as "like vaseline with a flavor of port wine."

That's a good description of ecclesiastical vocal function.

There are clergy in Canada who, by virtue of birth and education, have accents which are distinctly not Canadian.

These men do have a right to their accents, and we must not quarrel over any person's natural mode of speech.

But we are allowed to suspect that in some instances an honest British accent is overplayed or "improved" a little for pulpit use. (How about that, eh, chaps?)

No doubt a minister has a right to fancy-up his way of speaking if he wishes, although he might profitably ponder Stephen Leacock's comment, "I myself speak Ontario English; I don't admire it, but it's all I can do; anything is better than affectation."

But ministerial accents may be more than harmless little professional foibles.

They may be symptoms of illness in the Church.

Daniel Jenkins suggested that the widespread incidence of distinctive ministerial accents "is an indication that a church is beginning to slow down and stagnate."

MONKEY LIVES WITH NEW HEAD

TOKYO (Reuter) — A United States brain surgeon has told an international neurological conference here of head transplants carried out on monkeys.

A report presented by Dr. Robert White, chief neurosurgeon at Cleveland Metropolitan General Hospital, said one of the eight monkeys operated on lived for 36 hours, moving its eyes and chewing.

The five-hour operation involved first linking the windpipes and respiratory systems of donor and recipient monkeys, followed by the carotid artery and jugular vein.

In this way the head to be transplanted received blood from both sources in cross circulation, preventing deterioration of brain functions.

The Days of Apprehension

Map shows site, effects of spill

VANCOUVER (CP) — For 17 days apprehension has dogged harbor and environmental officials mopping up the oil spill near the entrance to Vancouver harbor.

It was 3:19 a.m. Tuesday, Sept. 25, when the bow of the Japanese freighter Sun Diamond sliced into the British freighter Erawan, rupturing her fuel tanks and spilling 50,000 gallons of bunker oil into waters almost within hailing distance of the University of British Columbia.

Despite ideal weather conditions and swift action, swirling tidal waters carried some 20,000 gallons across the bay to foul West Vancouver area shores. The cleanup, which may cost upwards of $375,000, is expected to continue until spring.

It is the experience of this relatively minor spill, the first of any magnitude to hit Vancouver harbor, that causes the apprehension. If a small spill can cause such problems, what would result from a major spill involving one of the giant tankers now coming into increasing use?

"It would be disastrous," says Captain Roy Holland, Vancouver harbormaster. "There is no other way to describe it—disastrous."

"It gives me the shivers," says Jack Wood, who as superintendent of parks for West Vancouver has been involved in the cleanup.

WORST OVER

More than two weeks after the spill, the 9,229-ton Erawan is safely in drydock and the worst of the cleanup is over. But long stretches of the rocky West Vancouver shoreline remain fouled.

Mr. Wood has six men on fulltime cleanup work and assigns more when he can. Another 30 or more employed by the federal environment department and ministry of transport are also hard at work.

In badly-fouled areas, the oil is being soaked up with peat moss, rocks cleaned with highpressure hoses and floating debris gathered up. Some oilsoaked debris and peat moss is trucked to city dumps and the remainder burned, in small piles to reduce smoke pollution.

The final scrubbing is expected to be handled by winter gales.

The collision provided the first real trial of a spill plan drawn up by environmental and harbor officials.

"Everything possible . . . to alleviate the effects of the spill was done . . . as quickly as possible . . . ," says Captain Holland.

SCRAMBLED FROM BED

Five minutes after the accident report everyone concerned had been alerted. Captain Holland and several other officials didn't wait to dress, arriving at their offices in pyjamas.

The first job was to separate the two freighters and ensure they were not in danger of sinking. At 8:30 a.m. the first oil boom was ringed around the Erawan, and two were added during the day.

On advice of harbor officials knowledgeable about tidal currents, truckloads of peat moss were delivered to West Vancouver beaches before the first oil floated in.

Hundreds of area residents, many of them students, raced to the waterfront to help spread peat moss and straw. Centres were set up to handle oil - smeared birds, their numbers surprisingly small thanks in part to enterprising youngsters who drove them away from oil-fouled areas with stones.

The city of Vancouver escaped virtually unscathed. Almost perversely, the currents swept the oil to the opposite side into the home riding of federal Environment Minister Jack Davis, where the rugged shoreline made the cleanup more difficult.

Inevitably, the cleanup operation brought complaints. Some felt oil booms should have been placed around the vessels immediately, instead of after almost 5½ hours. Harbor officials explain that rescue tugs needed sea room until the freighters were separated and secure.

"If the Erawan had gone down with her fuel tanks leaking oil, we'd really have been in a mess," one official said.

A West Vancouver high school was miffed that authorities turned down its offer to cancel classes and make 1,200 students available.

"Most of our beaches aren't open like Vancouver's, where it's relatively safe to use lots of volunteers," Mr. Wood explained. "We'd feel pretty bad if some kid slipped and broke his neck or something."

The Japanese and British owners of the two freighters have each been required to post $375,000 bonds against possible court damage awards to pay for the cleanup.

The two ships are also suing each other. Each had a Canadian pilot aboard.

A 5-Letter Word Meaning Winner

LONDON (NYT) John (three across: "Lan - - - -!" exclaimed the grandmother who moved to Alabama from Cheapside) and Edmund (four down: his cross words cause pain but not heartache) have met only casually, but at 11 or so each night they lock in tight mental combat.

Edmund Akenhead is the chief designer of the British commuter's daily mind-sharpener: The Times crossword puzzle.

Dr. John Sykes, an astrophysicist turned editor of the Concise Oxford Dictionary, has just won the national puzzle championship of The Times for the second year running.

Having beaten out a field of 700 semi-finalists, Sykes and seven other contestants sat down in the Mayfair Theatre here with four unpublished Times crossword puzzles. Sykes breezed through one in a little over three minutes, took eight to nine minutes on two others and needed all of 12 minutes for the fourth.

He averaged eight and a quarter minutes a puzzle. This put him ahead of John Brightley, a teacher from Liverpool, whose average was 11 minutes, 35 seconds. Terry Girdlestone, a research scientist from Somerset was third and James Atkins, a London opera singer was fourth.

If the prizes were not very impressive —Sykes won a half gallon of whisky and two weeks in Monte Carlo, and he does not like Monte Carlo — there was a good deal of honor in it.

Words, punned, spun and twisted around, are a minor national sport in Britain. Sykes has established national supremacy in an advocation to which bishops, bankers, judges and Oxford dons devote 20 or 30 minutes of concentrated brainpower each morning.

The other day, in his office on the top of an old brick house in Oxford, he tried to marshal his thoughts about crossword puzzles and how he does them. "It is a bit like asking a cook to explain how she makes mayonnaise," he objected mildly.

Sykes sits at his desk confronted by three large dictionaries on stands and boxes of file cards. Colleagues put their head around the door to consult him about a definition, or a German phrase, or possibly a Russian, Hungarian or Japanese one. Sykes has done translations in all these languages and more.

"A Crossword puzzle in Japanese . . ." he mused at one point in the conversation. "Let me see, you would use characters instead of letters. So you would come out with sentences instead of words, wouldn't you."

While he has done crossword puzzles in French and German, he does not think highly of them. "English does seem the best language for this kind of thing," he said. "For one thing, you have this wealth of short words for filling up the small spaces."

"And there may be something about the national character," he went on. "The French, for example, like to talk to each other on trains. It takes the Englishman to keep on his bowler and hide himself behind The Times.

"You will note The Times puzzle can be brought to the front without lowering the paper. You simply refold it. You even find they frequently will place an advertisement beside it with a lot of white space for trying out words. I don't do that myself."

Sykes used to do the puzzle in The Listener, a weekly magazine whose puzzles he rates as by far the hardest in Britain. Those in The Times, The Telegraph and the Guardian, he says, seem about equally difficult.

Their challenge lies not in the use of obscure words. It is a point of pride for Akenhead, The Times's puzzle editor, to keep to words that an educated man will know. The difficulty is in the cryptic, sometimes outrageous, trickery of the definition which generally incorporate two clues: One in the definition, and one in some play on the syllables of the world.

Sykes admires Akenhead's work. It is elegant and it avoids shortcuts, he says. But he is not interested in setting crossword puzzles himself.

"It takes a whole different class of person," he said. "You would have to spend at least a day designing a good puzzle. It is rather akin to preparing a large meal for people who will demolish it in minutes, leaving only the dishes to wash up."

COINS SHOWN ACTUAL SIZE.

The first issue of a nation's coinage is a rare event. And an important opportunity for collectors.

The independent nation of Barbados is about to issue its first coinage. This will be the first national coinage in Barbados' 350-year history.

To mark this historic occasion, the Government of Barbados has authorized the minting of a limited number of complete PROOF SETS for collectors. The Franklin Mint of the United States, world's foremost private mint, has been appointed official minter of this coinage.

These Proof Sets of Barbados' first national coinage are available for only a limited time. All orders must be postmarked by November 30, 1973—Barbados Independence Day.

Eight Coin Denominations

There will be eight Barbados coins, ranging in denomination from one cent to ten dollars. The $10 coin will be minted in solid sterling silver and the $5 coin in .800 fine silver.

The face of each coin will bear a finely detailed image characteristic of Barbados—one of the most beautiful countries in the Caribbean. The reverse of each coin will carry the official Barbados Coat of Arms.

Stalemate May Cause Loss of Funds to Aid Deaf

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Federal funds promised to help the deaf and hard of hearing may be lost because of lack of action by those who need them.

Mrs. Louise Olson, treasurer of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute of Vancouver Island, says the government has given a promise of funds once a national institute is formed.

To help form such a group a federal grant of $50,000 financed a meeting in Ottawa last May, attended by 200 people.

Stemming out of the conference, a committee of 24 people, two from each province and another four representing French-speaking people in Ontario and Quebec was established.

Called the Council of Organizations Serving the Deaf, the committee has met a stalemate. It asked that all organizations send in briefs, outlining the needs of the deaf and hard of haring. Only three briefs have been received.

Mrs. Olson says the main stumbling block is lack of communication. Radio and television are of no use to the deaf and she is hoping that newspaper coverage may be able to bridge the gap.

"We have no idea how many deaf and hard of hearing people there are in Victoria," she admits, "but a survey has indicated there are 50,000 deaf people in Canada.

"There could be twice as many who are hard of hearing."

Her organization is concerned that unless the national committee receives backing from as many deaf and hard of hearing people as possible, the national institute will never be formed.

"The basic fact is they (the deaf) don't know what is happening," she says. "The shame of it is that it is the children who are coming up now who will suffer if no action is taken."

Her organization mans an office in room 208, 1029 Douglas, from noon to 3 p.m. Mondays, Wedneday and Fridays. The phone number is 384-8535.

She warns that provincial government assistance could also be lost through lack of action.

Instruction for the deaf and hard of hearing is available in the primary and elementary schools. However, there is no such instruction for the hard of hearing past the elementary stage and deaf children must go to Jericho High School in Vancouver to continle their schooling past that level.

John Walsh, superintendent of special services for the provincial department of education will attend a meeting to be held 8 p.m. Oct. 24 in the Dominion Hotel.

Mrs. Olson is hoping that many of the problems facing handicapped children and their families will be aired at this meeting.

She's also hoping the meeting will be the catalyst that will help make a national institute a reality.

"If it (the national body) doesn't go now," she says, "we will be back to the Stone Age again."

Virus Suspect In MS

BOSTON (UPI) — Three doctors from Massachusetts General Hospital say one of the strongest clues yet indicates that multiple sclerosis may be caused by a virus.

Reporting in the current New England Journal of Medicine, the doctors said they found that 14 confirmed MS victims in Mansfield Mass., had lived there in 1932 when a pond and city waterways were found to be highly contaminated with bacteria. All were about 14 years old at the time.

The disease is a neuromuscular disorder in which the fatty tissue around the nerves breaks down and resulting scars slow or block electrical impulses between the brain and muscles. The result can be total or partial disability.

The doctors who reported on the Mansfield cases are David C. Poskanzer, Richard Eastman and Jean Sheridan.

Their research began after one of Poskanzer's patients from Mansfield mentioned that there seemed to be a high incidence of the disease there.

Of the 14 cases in the community of 1,000 persons, nine grew up there and eight of the nine lived within several blocks of each other.

Recent research has indicated that even though a person may contract MS as a teen-ager, the disease fails to produce symptoms until young adulthood or middle age.

ANOTHER MYSTERY is revealed for city kids, five-year-old Brenda Couvillon and her 10-year-old brother, from Windsor, Ont., who had never seen pumpkins growing before they happened on this autumn field.

Cafe Deaths In 6th Place

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sudden death from choking on food, called a "cafe coronary" because it usually occurs in a restaurant and resembles a heart attack, is the sixth leading cause of accidental death in the U.S., according to a report published in a magazine for doctors.

"It is remarkable that the number of deaths due to food asphixiation exceeds those due to such familiar mechanisms as aircraft accidents, firearms and lighting," said the report by Dr. R. K. Haugen, a Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., pathologist.

National Safety Council statistics show 2,417 deaths in 1968 and 2,641 in 1969 from "inhalation of food," which is more than the 2,300-plus accidental firearms deaths each year (not including homicide and suicides), the nearly 2,000 annual deaths from aircraft accidents and about 130 annual lighting deaths.

Motor vehicle deaths lead the accidental list and falls are second.

Iron-in-Bread Regulations Draws Strong Criticism

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In an order criticized by some doctors as a dangerous human experiment, the U.S. government Friday ordered the bakeries to double the iron content in white bread.

The Food and Drug Administration said it was issuing the order, after three years of study and controversy, because research indicated Americans are not getting enough iron in their diet — partly because of the declining use of iron cookware. It will go into effect in six months.

Dr. William H. Crosby, chief of hematology at the Scripps Clinic in La Jolla, Calif., said there has been "absolutely no work done" to demonstrate that more iron in bread would be safe or effective.

"The manufacturers would not and could not provide such evidence," he said. "The fact that it may not be safe is really unconscionable."

Crosby said excessive iron can cause cirrhossis of the liver and pancreas, diabetes, heart failure and impotence in males.

Dr. Margaret Ann Krikker of Albany, N.Y., a general practitioner who has treated iron-related disorders and who helped circulate a petition against the propsoal signed by more than 100 doctors, said:

"This is an experiment, in my view an irresponsible experiment, unprecedented in the history of mankind . . . I predict a very significant portion of the population will have an iron overload in 10 years."

Dr. Alexander Schmidt, FDA commissioner, said he realized there was "legitimate concern" from physicians who have said the move might result in too much iron in the diet — a potentially dangerous situation since the body can store and use iron but not eliminate it.

But he added: "As people's eating habits change, a significant number of people in the United States are getting less and less iron and becoming anemic. Some very good surveys have shown that as many as a quarter of young women in some areas have iron deficiency anemia . . ."

The new level of iron for enriched flour will be 40 milligrams per pound, compared to a present range of 13 to 16.5 mgs; for enriched bread it will be 25 mgs., compared to 8-12.5 resently.

Canadian Doctors Adopting New Sterilization Technique

EDMONTON (CP) — "Belly-button surgery" allows women to be sterilized as easily as men, says gynecologist Dr. D. M. Buchanan.

Imported from Europe, the surgical technique — otherwise known as laparoscopy, requires two pencil-wide punctures, one usually in the navel and the other in the abdomen.

Dr. Buchanan said only a tiny scar is left and the woman has to remain in hospital for only one day.

One gynecologist said one patient who had a laparoscopy went dancing the day she was released from hospital and another went skiing. This was a sharp contrast to the standard sterilization method of tubular ligation, where a woman often was in great pain for several days after the operation.

1,000 WOMEN

Dr. Buchanan estimated that about 1,000 women have had the laparoscopy operation since it was introduced in the city about three years ago.

The operation, developed about 20 years ago is not widely used in Canada.

"I don't know why it hasn't caught on here," Dr. Buchanan said.

Dr. K. H. Finzer, who introduced the technique to the Charles Camsell Hospital, said part of the reason may be that it takes doctors some time to get used to it.

About 20 doctors in the city can perform the surgery and most of the hospitals have the equipment—or are getting it—necessary for the operation.

"This is the only method of sterilization of women," Dr. Finzer said. "It's safe, reliable and a minimum of expenditure in time and money."

Once doctors become used to the technique, the operation takes about 20 to 30 minutes, the same as for the standard ligatfon.

Dr. Buchanan said any couple wanting sterilization as a permanent method of birth control must decide between themselves and their doctor which partner should be sterilized.

"If there are no problems it's a toss-up," said Dr. L. M. Dushinski, a urologist who performs vasectomies on men.

Dr. Dushinski said a vasectomy does not reduce the sexual drive. About 42 per cent of a recent study group reported an increase in sexual drive after the operation.

Vasectomy is a relatively simple operation that may be done under local anesthetic in a doctor's office. Ligation is done in hospital under general anesthetic.

Dr. Dushinski said a man becomes sterile about six weeks after a vasectomy.

With a laparoscopy a woman is immediately sterile.

REVERSIBILITY

A vasectomy is reversible, although reversal success depends on several factors such as the technique used and the length of time between the operations. Laparoscopy is usually not reversible.

Dr. Dushinski said he averaged about 15 vasectomies a week two years ago but now is doing three to four.

Part of the reason for the boom a few years ago, he said, was that sterilization became socially acceptable and talked about. Consequently, persons who might have been thinking about sterilization for years finally had the operation.

The backlog now had been taken care of and men currently requesting vasectomies were usually younger than before.

Doctors said they prefer their sterilization patients be older than 30 but exceptions are made in particular cases.

John Smedley pullovers are back! . . .

They're the finest, softest botany wool imaginable . . . generously cut, with mock turtleneck, back zipper, and particularly well-fitting shoulders . . . Wash beautifully, even in the machine . . . Plates both useful and ornamental . . .

Really think we could write an entire column on the subject of plates . . . the unusual, interesting or just plain pretty plates we saw at Sydney Reynolds last week! . . . For people who can still afford steak . . . it's bound to taste twice as delectable served on one of the Sportsman steak platters by Weatherly of England . . . oval shaped plates with scenes of ducks, pheasants, geese, moose, hunting dogs and other such creatures pertaining to the chase . . . A complete set . . . each plate different . . . consists of eight . . . but they're sold separately at $7.50 each . . . These plates would make attractive wall plaques, as well as being useful! . . . Dior used caramel-colored Shetland tweed for his huge "steamer coat" and matching pantsuit.

Serenely suited for fall . . .

Admittedly, there are a few women who don't look good in a suit . . . but for the vast majority of us, at least one well-tailored suit in our wardrobes is the sine qua non for looking and feeling chic and well-turned-out once the leaves start to fall! . . . Wilson's have some very handsome new suits you really should go and see . . . Those by David Henry, of Dublin, are new to Victoria . . . exclusive to Wilson's . . . and reasonably priced for this day and age! . . . Most have A-line skirts and simple well-cut jackets . . . Noticed several monotone tweeds . . . royal blue and peacock blue . . . priced at just $115 . . . There's a russet and camel boucle with crocheted trim tagged at $130 . . . and a smart houndstooth check with front-pleated skirt . . . Other new suits from Alexon of England . . . also quite modestly priced . . . We especially like the 3-piece grey flannel suit with camel stitching . . . little fitted jacket . . . skirt with two deep pleats in front . . . and camel ribbed wool pullover with long sleeves and turtle neck . . . Just $135 for this . . . There's a nice all wool check tweed too . . . in shades of red, green and brown . . . The longer length jacket is belted and has suede trim . . . A-line skirt . . . Same style in blue and camel . . . priced at $120 at . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

The two-piece dress is gaining in importance with long over-blouse, slim but easy skirt.

Here's quality at modest prices . . .

We don't impress too easily, we assure you . . . but every time we look at price tags on clothing at Roy Imports we have to double check because we can't trust our eyes that such quality merchandise can be so modestly priced! . . . Take the new Dalkeith skirts, for instance . . . The A-line style with stitched seams down the front is only $20 . . . and this for pure wool, mind you! Black, green and wine in this . . . while the wool worsted skirt with pleats back and front is tagged at $36 . . . Comes in grey, brown and camel . . . Long sleeved botany wool Dalkeith pullovers to match all these skirts cost but $19 . . . Then there's the new shipment of London Fog raincoats which just came in . . . Beige, cerise, red, and a new light shade of navy . . . with zip-in plaid wool linings so they can be worn comfortably on nippy days . . . $60 will get you one of these smart raincoats . . . which come in sizes from 10 to 18 . . . Still on the subject of coats . . . we saw several new llama coats cut slightly full, with raglan sleeves . . . grey and white and brown and white windowpane checks . . . the sort of coat you can slip on easily over a suit, if need be . . . Very good value at $160 . . . Roy Imports, 817 Government St., 384-1737.

Navy and black are important colors for evening this fall and winter.

Braided rugs look so "homey" . . .

Maybe it's a throwback to our youth when we lived deep in the heart of French Canada . . . but the sight of a braided rug always gives us a warm, welcoming homey feeling . . . Imagine, then, how we felt when we saw literally dozens and dozens of colorful nylon braided rugs at Standard Furniture on Wednesday! . . . True, they weren't braided by clever French-Canadian hands . . . but by equally clever Japanese ones . . . and we're assured they're the finest quality you'll find anywhere in Canada . . . being made of 3-ply nylon very strongly sewn . . . there's quite a color range . . . red, brown, pumpkin, gold, avocado . . . and the most interesting shapes and sizes . . . Everything from little 2 x 3 rugs to put in a doorway . . . or use in front of the kitchen sink, chesterfield or hearth . . . to a 9 x 12 rug which you could use in a living room, or den . . . And a long skinny one . . . 2 x 8 . . . which would make a pretty nifty hall runner! . . . Really, these braided rugs have so many uses in a home that we can't begin to enumerate them all . . . just use your own imagination! . . . They look especially attractive with maple or colonial furniture . . . though they'll fit in well with other decors . . . giving a nice warm look to a room . . . As we said, seven different sizes . . . ranging in price from $3.88 to $78.88 . . . And where else could you possibly find sturdy, long-wearing floor coverings so reasonably priced? . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

New at Eaton's Townhouse . . .

Spotted some very smart new coats from Germany in Eaton's Townhouse the other day . . . All wool, with good detailing, and interesting style touches which make them look just a bit different . . . not to mention price tags which won't strain your clothes budget too much! . . . If you'd like a coat in a solid color, do look at the double-breasted belted topcoats in black or brown . . . There are boucle coats in several color combinations . . . double-breasted styles with very pretty backs, and most unusual pockets . . . Also a coat in a beautiful shade of blue . . . Turning to other new arrivals at the Townhouse . . . we saw a stunning long white doubleknit wool evening dress and jacket . . . sparked with rhinestone buttons and buckle . . . Size 8 . . . And some smashing shirt dresses you'd swear were suede, but are actually a fabric with the rich, silky look and feel of suede, but none of its disadvantages . . . meaning you can send it to the cleaners without a qualm! . . . We like the new jacket dresses in brown, navy and grey wool with buttonholes and trim in a contrasting shade . . . and the English dresses of angora and wool printed in designs which tend to slenderize . . . which is nice because they're in sizes 16 and 18 . . . Eaton's Townhouse, 382-7141, local 367.

Community Explores Pollution-Free 'Alchemy'

By JOHN L. HESS

FALMOUTH, Mass. (NYT) — Can a family grow a year's supply of fish in its back yard at negligible cost? Will the fish be good to eat?

The first question was posed by a dedicated band of young ecology buffs, the second by a visiting sensualist. The answer to both appears to be yes, judging from this season's experiments at The New Alchemy Institute East.

This grand name covers a 12-acre Cape Cod farm rented two years ago by a group of oceanographers from nearby Woods Hole and wives and friends, all profundly disturbed by the cancer of pollution and convinced that human survival depends on the use of "soft technology" — that is, nonpolluting science — to create a decentralized, nature-loving but still comfortable way of life.

The Cape Cod project is loosely affiliated with others at Santa Barbara, Calif., and in Costa Rica and to organic farming enthusiasts all over the United States, Canada and overseas.

New Alchemy is not precisely a commune, but rather a community. All the dozen or so active members and the many visitors have other jobs, at least for parts of the year. On a summer weekend, though, it is a happy hive.

Young men and women are pulling weeds, watering specimen beds, entering notes on clipboards, feeding rabbits and fish, gathering vegetables and preparing the midday meal.

William McLarney, a lean, dark, oceanographer, is at the pond, counting midges, tiny flies, in an elaborate experiment aimed at refining techniques for growing larvae as fish food. A muscular youth is atop one of four windmills of unusual design, installing a new rig.

Another has taken half a dozen towheaded children to comb the town dump for junk such as the crankshaft and differential that are used in one windmill, the steel drums in another and the refrigerators that now serve as tanks.

John Todd, a founder and president of New Alchemy East, said they had tried flailing the wheat in the ancient manner, "and now we know why people left the farm."

Todd, a blond Canadian, was painting a door on one of two plastic-covered fishponds. He confided that he had resigned from the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, effective at the end of the year, to devote all his life to the farm and to his home in Falmouth, where he is raising goats and chickens and fruit, and using septic tank wastes to grow larvae as fish food.

One of the alternatives is the backyard fish farm, designed to raise a year's supply of protein at little cost in time and money. The first experiment was made with tilapia, a tropical food fish that is grown commercially in Asia, Central America, Israel and, on a small scale, in Florida, but not heretofore in the north.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report

By WALTER C. ALVAREZ

A woman writes to ask me if she needs to take an ovarian hormone after she has gone through her menopause. As everyone probably knows, at the time of the menopause the woman's ovaries cut down very greatly on their production of female hormone; for a few years other glands may produce some of the hormone, but eventually there is no more female hormone produced.

I have seen many postmenopausal women who I think would have had immensely better health if they had only kept taking female hormone. Many such women got so much softning of their spinal vertebrae that they became round-shouldered and sometimes developed a "widow's hump" at the upper part of the spine.

Sometimes a postmenopausal woman, when she falls, gets a broken hipbone or shoulder.

One woman I know lost several inches in height as a result of the collapsing of her spine. For some reason, after the menopause, the lime-salts seem to go out of the bones, giving them a more porous, brittle character and making a fall a potential disaster for an elderly woman. This process seems to be slowed down when a woman takes female hormone during and after her menopause.

Some women after the menopause are unhappy because they began to have pain and sensitiveness with intercourse, as the tissues of the vaginal lining age, atrophy and lose their moistness The taking of female hormone can help such a woman to avoid this distress. Also many a woman has reported that she felt younger in spirit during the years she kept taking female hormone after the menopause.

BRAIN DYSFUNCTION

Of late, pediatricians have been talking about a condition called minimal brain dysfunction, or MBD, which can cause a child to be restless (or hyperkinetic) and to have a short attention span, which makes it difficult for him to sit still in school long enough to learn well.

A teacher who does not realize that the child has minimal brain dysfunction may say that he is just a "behavior problem" and she may constantly scold him.

It is easy for parents of such a child to lose patience with him, too, because he doesn't seem to want to mind, or pay attention when they tell him to do something, and again, he is often scolded and punished for his misbehavior. The irritability and short attention span tend to disappear as the child grows into maturity; however he may carry with him the emotional scars that came from the fact that his parents and teachers did not understand why he "misbehaved" so constantly.

As Dr. John E. Peters, professor of child psychiatry at the University of Arkansas, said at a recent meeting of pediatricians, there are four methods of helping an MBD child to overcome his difficulties: 1) perhaps with special training in visual and auditory perception; 2) helping him to develop better muscular coordination, perhaps in a gymnasium: 3) with help from the school physician, who may possibly prescribe a drug that will calm him down somewhat; and 4) with help from a psychiatrist, psychologist, or social therapist.

Also, the parents need to be taught what to do and what not to do for the child. They must try to get over feelings of guilt, anger, or frustration which will interfere with their handling of the somewhat difficult child. They need to understand that an MBD child is not mentally retarded; he may in fact show exceptional ability in certain areas, while he has lags in other areas. Dr. Peters says that these children "often have a high, hidden potential, and if helped, can make good, productive citizens." Often a physician can help the family of an MBD child with counselling and advice.

Some specific advice the doctor has for parents of such a child are:

Be firm. Do not flood the child with petty, time-consuming decisions such as what to wear. If he dawdles and shows indecision, make the decisions for him. However at other times, consider his opinion. The important thing is not to get into the habit of haggling, negotiating, or wheedling about small things such as watching an extra TV program or insisting that he try a new food.

Give the child chores to do, but accept his absent mindedness, and do not become overly concerned if he has trouble completing tasks.

Parents should be encouraged that the most irritating and troublesome of the child's symptoms tend to go away with time, and he can grow up to be a fine, productive citizen.

Free For The Asking

If you or anybody in your family is a "do-it-yourselfer," you will be delighted with this find.

It is a 16-page booklet entitled "Create with Foam." It tells you how to use foam rubber to renew chairs and chesterfields, mattresses, pillows and many other items around the home. You will also see that left over foam pieces can be used to stuff toys, make inner soles, powder puffs, party decorations and much more.

A list of the few basic tools needed for the job is also included. Then follows an explanation of the characteristics of the two most popular kinds of foam rubber and how to buy them.

There are also detailed instructions for creating throw pillows from your own design, how to make removable furniture cushions, how to reupholster kitchen chairs, chesterfields and other pieces of furniture.

If you follow the basic guidelines, you will find working with foam rubber very easy and thoroughly rewarding. Foam can be cut easily with kitchen shears dipped in water. If the foam with which you are working is thicker than two inches, use an electric carving knife for cutting.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romantic interests could hit snag. You perceive what is real, what is illusion. Truth, instead of making you free, could merely annoy. Be grown-up, willing to laugh at yourself. Your appetite will not be affected, world will continue to spin.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You have backing from "quiet" sources. Your opposition lacks substance. There is channel for your efforts, creative endeavors. If diplomatic, you get hearing and green light. One at top who seems indifferent is merely being cautious.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study Virgo message. Nothing now is apt to be cut-and-dried. There are complications but don't blow them up out of proportion. Ideas could flounder. You need time to develop, test and analyze. Don't rush, especially in traffic.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your financial bounce will be higher than suspected. What you have, can offer, is marketable. Know it and refuse to be cowed, frightened, intimidated. Partner, associate may try to "buy you cheap." A bit of laughter is best weapon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Unorthodox procedures are most likely to succeed. You cannot force, push or cajole. Let others show their hands. You do best now as an overall observer. Aries, Libra persons could play key roles. Finish rather than initiate project. Maintain low profile.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Rhythm of action is subdued. In efforts to break through to new project, suspicion blocks progress. Those who claim to be doing much for you may be laying down on job. Face reality. Get on high horse—assert independence. You have right to No. 1 treatment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emotional responses could lead to proverbial lovers' quarrel. Means don't take others, or yourself, too seriously. You don't know it all but you know enough. Means bide your time. You get what you want if you don't insist. You will understand.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Examine potential. You can spread emotional wings. There is no need to be confined. Obstacles come from within. Shake off foolish doubts and start climbing. Goal is available. Know it and act like you know it.

DOCTORS CHALLENGE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has ordered bakeries to double the iron content of white bread beginning in April, 1974.

A spokesman said Friday the ageney was issuing the order because research indicated Americans are not getting enough iron in their diet. The decision came after three years of study.

The order drew immediate criticism by some doctors as a dangerous human experiment.

Dr. William H. Crosby, chief of hematology at the Scripps Clinic in La Jolla, Calif., said there has been "absolutely no work done" to demonstrate that more iron in bread would be safe or effective.

Crosby said excessive iron can cause cirrhosis of the liver and pancreas, diabetes, heart failure and impotence in males.

Pear Kucken for Generations

By MARY MOORE

One grandmother, two aunts and two grandsons were having a late fall cookout early one Saturday evening and the grandmother served a test dessert inappropriate to the occasion — a pear kuchen with ginger whipped cream. To the grandmother's great satisfaction it was a complete success. Don't forget or omit the ginger. This dish may be made with canned pears when pear season is over.

PEAR KUCHEN
(Serves 6 generously)

Topping:

grated rind 1 lemon
2 tbsp. granulated sugar
¼ tsp. granulated sugar
3 or 4 ripe pears (see below)

Batter:

1½ c. unsifted all-purpose flour
1 tbsp. baking powder
½ c. sugar
½ tsp. salt
2 eggs
½ c. milk
1-3 c. melted butter
½ pt. (1¼ c.) whipping (32 per cent) cream
2 tbsp. icing sugar
½ tsp. ginger

In a cup combine grated lemon rind, 2 tablespoons sugar and ¼ teaspoon ginger. Prepare pears by washing, peeling and cutting in halves lengthwise. Remove cores and stems. Slice off rounded back of each and cut each of these thin slices in half. Cover pear pieces with cold water to prevent browning.

Make Batter by sifting together flour, baking powder, ½ cup sugar and salt. Make well in centre and break in eggs and add milk and melted butter. Beat in to flour to barely mix. Spread batter evenly in buttered 10" pie plate. Drain and dry pear halves and arrange, hollow side up, wheel fashion, on top of batter. Fit small pieces between. Sprinkle with sugar-rind mixture. Bake at 350 deg. Fahr. 30 to 35 minutes.

Whip cream until it will hold its shape. Fold in sugar and ginger and serve, from your prettiest small bowl, over each serving of Pear Kuchen.

Humphrey Funds Queried

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. Comptroller-General Elmer B. Staats has requested a justice department investigation into contributions from six corporations to Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey's 1972 presidential campaign.

A General Accounting Office report released Friday also said that Staats asked the government to take appropriate action on the Humphrey committee's failure to "more promptly" disclose $456,732 in contributions and $420,236 in expenses.

Rubber Lips Offer To Kissing Fool

DEAR ABBY: My lady friend is a kissing fool. Hugging and kissing is her idea of the utmost in ecstasy, and she can't seem to get enough of it.

Last night we sat on her sofa kissing from midnight until 2 a.m., and I hardly managed to get my own lips together once in those two hours. If my nose had been stopped up, I would have suffocated. All this time she was glued to my face, wearing me out.

I tried to explain that a normal man enjoys about five minutes of kissing, but I never got to finish the sentence.

It's not as if we are a pair of starry-eyed teen-agers, either. We are up in years.

Is there such a thing as a lip fetish? If so, this lady has a serious case. She doesn't need a man. Give her a pair of rubber lips nailed to a post and she would be in business.

Do you think she needs psychiatric help to cool her down? Or should I seek some myself for continuing to put up with her? — DONE IN.

DEAR DONE: If you want to cool her down, marry her.

DEAR ABBY: Have you ever heard of giving an unwed mother a baby shower? The girl is only 15, and the baby's father is 16. She is five months along, and her girl friends are giving her a shower. Maybe by the time the baby is born she will be married to the baby's father, but right now his folks have refused to sign, and he can't get married without their signatures, as he is under age.

I bought a gift with money I saved up from baby-sitting. My mother says I can go if I want to, but it would be like saying I saw nothing wrong with what this girl did. Abby, I think she did a wrong thing, but she is my friend and I can't turn my back on her now.

Some of the girls' mothers told their daughters they should send their gifts, but not go. How do you feel about this? — ALSO 15.

DEAR ALSO: Being loyal to a friend doesn't necessarily imply approval of everything that friend does. Your peer group is showing more charity and compassion for an unmarried expectant mother than earlier generations would have shown, which I think is to your credit.

DEAR ABBY: For the last six months my husband faithfully has gotten up at 1 a.m. every Saturday morning to go Eastern Shore fishing.

I never paid much attention to it until recently when I noticed that when he came home he was wearing his best shoes, best pants, and brand new shirt.

When I asked him about it, he said he had to look decent in case he wanted to stop in a restaurant for coffee and a sandwich. Abby, I would like your reaction to his explanation. — SUSPICIOUS.

DEAR SUSPICIOUS: His story sounds fishy to me. Fishing clothes are considered "decent" in fishing territory. But on the other hand, if he had something to hide he could easily change back into his fishing clothes before returning home. (P.S. How much fish does he bring home? If it's usually not much of a catch, you may catch him.)

Lang Cool To Beef Embargo

By MARVIN ZIVITZ

EDMONTON (CP) — A suggested embargo on United States cattle to help the Canadian cattle-feeding industry received a cool reception Friday from Otto Lang, minister responsible for the Canadian wheat board.

"The more open our trade with the U.S. . . . the better," Lang told a news conference. Instead of an embargo, he would like to see a study of the relationships between the prices of grains such as barley and corn and how they affect the industry.

The Alberta Cattle Feeders Association has complained that even with an import duty of $1.50 per hundredweight, handling charges and freight, cattle are being brought from the northwestern U.S. to the Lethbridge area cheaper than area ranchers can sell them.

Lang, in the city to explain the new federal feed grain policy to provincial government officials and farm organizations, said there is no indication of a drop in meat prices. Prices levelled off recently following consumer resistance, "but I don't think Canadians want to eat less meat."

Lang said the feed grains policy is not intended to create cheap or expensive grain, but to bring about an "equitable price across the country." High prices faced by Canadian cattle and hog producers reflected the world market.

Lang said cattlemen should not abandon their business because of high feed prices. Many cattlemen had told him they are willing to take a chance with high feed costs because the price of beef will eventually reflect feed prices.

One of the major reasons for Lang's visit, his second swing through the Prairies in the last 10 days, is to clear up misconceptions about feed grains policies.

The market potential for the Canadian grain industry is "very large," Mr. Lang said. Producers have been challenged by the record exports of the last three years to produce more.

Lang said unofficial figures indicate that the temporary Wheat Reserves Act, providing assistance for storage to grain companies, has expired. Terms of the act call for it to be automatically repealed once stocks of wheat in storage fall below 178 million bushels.

SCIENCE COUNCIL SPURNS MOVING

OTTAWA (FP) — The Science Council of Canada has rejected recent suggestions that it move its headquarters and staff from Ottawa, possibly to Montreal or Toronto.

The rejection of suggestions made by some of its own executives and by a still-secret report to Science Minister Jeanne Sauve in effect kills one of the more controversial of a number of changes in the role of the Science Council being considered by the government.

During a closed-door meeting of the council at Churchill Falls, Labrador last week, the council concluded there would be no practical gains and "some fairly substantial losses" associated with moving its staff of 50 away from the nation's capital.

Jim Mullin, deputy executive director of the council, listed among disadvantages of such a move:

A headquarters outside Ottawa would have problems dealing with government policy makers and perhaps in influencing the government.

There would be a major loss of staff. Mullin estimated that only a handful of the support staff would agree to move and perhaps half of the 15 science advisors.

Risk that the council would lose some of its national view.

Duce's Killer Dies

ROME (Reuter) — Walter Audisio, the man who killed dictator Benito Mussolini and his mistress, died Thursday night. Audisio, 64, better known under his resistance name of Colonel Valario, killed Mussolini April 28, 1945, when the dictator was trying to flee to Switzerland.

40 FANATICS SHAPING UP FOR BIG FRISBEE TOSS

COPPER HARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — Forty die-hard frisbee addicts are limbering up their fingers for what could turn into the sport's most prestigious event — the Keystone Bay autumn invitational guts frisbee tournament.

"What they mean by 'guts frisbee' is you gotta have guts to play it," explained Don Kilpela Jr., son of the owner of the Keweenaw Inn North in this community where the tourney takes place this weekend.

"We've invited the best teams in the country and we've put up $1,000 in prize money."

Kilpela said a game of frisbee is played with two teams of five gutsy members facing each other with no more than 15 yards between them. The players on each team measure the distance from each other by the length of their outstretched arms.

The saucer-like frisbee must be caught with only one hand.

"The thing that really makes it difficult is that a frisbee can be thrown at 70 m.p.h.," Kilpela said, "and to catch that with one hand takes a lot of guts."

Kilpela and the other frisbee "pros" are dead serious about their sport. The only acceptable device for contest purposes is a 1.7-gram orange frisbee exactly one foot in diameter.

"There's a lot of different frisbees going around," he warned. "There's those miniature, half-size frisbees and then those massive frisbees. But this is the only regulation frisbee. We bought 200 of them for the tournament."

Kilpela said the $1,000 in prizes could go a long way toward popularizing frisbees, which already claims an estimated 65,000 regular fans by his estimate.

"We're trying to bring some class and prestige into the tournament," he said. "I seriously think this is the start of something really big for frisbee."

Home Draws Visitors

GREAT SOMERFORD, England (Reuter) — Hundreds of sightseers flocked to this tiny village in the west of England Friday to look over the home of Princes Anne's fiance, Capt. Mark Phillips. Phillips's parents decided to open it to visitors this weekend to raise $12,500 for the repair of the local church and its bells.

Care and Feeding of a Camellia

The camellia (pronounced ca-mell-e-ah) seems to be a problem plant to many home gardeners judging from the questions received on its care, but its needs are very few and easily supplied.

The plant was named after George Joseph Kemel, a Jesuit of Moravia who travelled extensively in Asia. He sometimes spelled his name Camellus, the form adopted by Linnaeus when naming the plant.

Originally it was in the genus Thea, which includes the plants from which the tea of commerce is gathered, but botanical differences noticed later resulted in the camellia being placed in a separate genus.

When first introduced into cultivation in the early 18th century, the camellia was considered a tender plant suitable only for growing in a heated greenhouse or stovehouse, and it is still listed in many books as a 'stove plant."

This is probably the worst thing that could have happened to the camellia because it is one of the hardiest plants we can grow in this area, having survived undamaged the worst winters we have known here.

But we are still over-cautious, tending to fuss and coddle the shrubs, wrapping them in blankets over winter, and generally doing them more harm than good.

Where the right conditions exist to start with, treatments recommended by well-meaning friends (epsom salts, coffee grounds, grape-fruit skins) soon prove detrimental.

The best books on camellia culture are those sponsored by the Oregon Camellia Society, a group devoted solely to the culture of the camellia on the Pacific Coast.

Planting instructions and general culture are also supplied by nurseries growing only camellias, and it is interesting to note the same instructions apply to both azaleas and rhododendrons.

The largest camellia nursery on this coast attaches the following instruction to every plant:

(1) Camellias will not tolerate lime. Never plant near concrete foundations, or paths, nor where plaster or stucco has been dumped. Do not plant near a house on the sunny side, nor next to any object that will reflect heat; allow five feet from such objects.

(2) Camellias will grow faster and set more buds in a soil well prepared with peat moss, rotted vegetation (compost), leafmould, and woods soil. While all four are recommended well mixed together, peat moss and compost are essential when the other ingredients are not readily available.

(3) Never over-fertilize a camellia. Well-rotted (three years old) barnyard manure may be applied as a mulch to the surface soil in spring. For powdered fertilizer use only acid type designed for azaleas, rhododendrons, camellias, and acid soil plants. Give two small applications, one in March and one in April, rather than one large application. No fertilizer after April. Water soil well before and after each application.

(4) The watering of a camellia is extremely important. The fibrous roots grow near the surface and are killed or damaged when the soil is exposed to the sun, therefore deep and thorough watering is essential during the summer months to encourage the roots away from the surface.

The well-rotted manure mulch, or peat moss one inch deep over the root area, will assist in keeping the surface soil cool and moist.

The summer care you give your camellia will show the following spring. Yellowish-green leaves result from not applying the acide type fertilizer early in spring, or from roots drying out during summer, both of which affect bud development and flower size. Never cultivate the soil near a camellia (azalea or rhododendron) because the slightest root damage is soon reflected in the health of the plant.

(5) Planting instructions. Most gardeners plant camellias, azaleas and rhododendrons too deeply, which is a cause of poor health and lack of flowers.

If the plants are wrapped in burlap or plastic, remove the wrapping and set the top of the root ball not more than one inch below the level of the surrounding soil. If container grown, remove the container carefully without damaging any roots, gently loosen the roots, and set the plants so that the level of the soil in the container is the same as the surrounding soil.

When the hole is two-thirds filled with soil, pour in two buckets of water to settle the soil and drive out the air, then fill to the surrounding level.

(6) Flower damage (browning) is caused by sunshine striking the plant while frost is still in the buds. Plant where house or trees will provide sun protection until 10 on a winter morning.

(7) Never wrap a camellia over winter. Never use plastic film to wrap any shrub because the moisture which forms on the inner surface will freeze to buds and leaves causing more damage than would result to an uncovered plant.

One more suggestion on how to avoid bud damage by frost. There are hundreds of varieties of camellias classified into three groups; early flowering, mid-season, and late flowering. the earlies always suffer damage in the late spring frosts of the Victoria area. When purchasing make sure to obtain either mid-season or late flowering plants, preferrably the latter.

SNIPERS FLEE POLICE BARRAGE

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — About 100 shots were fired in a wild gunbbattle Thursday night as 60 policemen tried to flush an estimated six snipers from marshy area on Pontiac's South Side.

The snipers later escaped, police said.

Only one person was wounded in the hail of bullets that police said started flying after Roy McGhee, 23, of Pontiac, was fired on as he drove near a school.

A bullet struck him in the knee, but doctors said the wound was not serious.

When police went into the area to tow McGhee's car away, more firing ensued.

One police source estimated the persons in the swamp fired about 40 to 50 shots, with the police firing 50 to 60.

WORK FOR WEEK

Get the daffodils and all other kinds of narcissi into the ground this weekend, for they must begin rooting before really cold weather comes. If your soil is still dry when you plant, dampen it so that rooting will be encouraged.

In some areas, dahlias have been blackened by frost; cut foliage and flower stems down to six inches above ground, before lifting the tubers for winter storage.

If you have a slightly heated greenhouse or other suitable place indoors with winter temperature between 40 and 60 degrees, you can store geraniums and fuchsias in the coolest part. You can even take cuttings from both plants, grow them along steadily through winter. In spring they will make more rapid growth ready for blooming next summer.

Cut down fall flowering heleniums, Michaelmas-daisies, physostegias, rudbeckias, Gaillardia, boltonia and aconitums as the flowers fade, so that worthless seedlings do not spoil your named varieties next year. Some fall perennials continue to bloom after frost, so cut only the faded flower stems at the first cleanup.

Remove yellow leaves from all cabbage types.

Sow broad beans and early peas before end of October.

Tiniest Owl at Home

Shown here resting on a tree in downtown Toronto is the smallest owl in North America. It's called a Saw-Whet owl and is about eight inches long. Specimens are often seen in Toronto at this time of year, finding it a convenient stopping-off place on their migration south.

Java Worse Than Weed: Researcher

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) — A former U.S. mental health drug researcher says marijuana is not only harmless but less addictive than coffee.

Dr. Louis Lemberger, a pharmacologist who studied marijuana, drug abuse and amphetamines as a staff member of the National Institute of Mental Health, said the weed produces no ill effects on the bodies of frequent users.

"The person who goes without his morning cup of coffee has withdrawal symptoms all day," Lemberger told a luncheon of physicians Thursday. "Marijuana has no withdrawal."

"So far all evidence leads to the fact that it's not dangerous," he said.

Lemberger, now with Lily Laboratories for clinical research in Indianapolis, said all studies on marijuana prior to 1964 are meaningless because the weed's active ingredient, tetrahydrocannibinol, had not been identified.

Superport Despite Danger

OTTAWA (CP) — A superport at the mouth of the Saguenay River is worth building despite warnings of possible pollution disasters, says Pierre Camu, until recently the transport department's top marine official.

Camu, who left the department Oct. 1 to become president of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, said in an interview the economic benefits outweigh the pollution threat.

The federal government is examining proposals for a superport at either Ile Verte or Gros Cacouna, near the junction of the Saguenay and St. Lawrence rivers, 150 miles northeast of Quebec City.

Quebec Premierr Robert Bourassa said recently that Montreal would lose its standing as a major oil refining centre if the provincial government bows to pressures calling for a halt to the supertanker port project.

The Quebec port and similar facilities in the Atlantic provinces could be hard hit if a federal proposal to build a Canadian oil pipeline to Montreal is carried out.

But, Mr. Camu, who was federal marine administrator and president of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, said it is hard to know what would happen if the pipeline were built.

He said Montreal refineries are mostly supplied by oil delivered to Portland, Me., from Venezuela and the Persian Gulf.

The oil was carred to Montreal through a pipeline built in the mid-1930s.

It was clear that "an additional way to bring oil will be necessary."

He suggested trans-shipment to smaller vessels from supertankers at new Canadian ports might be an answer to demand for greater oil supplies.

A research group including university professors recently warned that an oil spill of several hundred thousand tons at the proposed superport would be carried down the St. Lawrence estuary as far as the Magdalen Islands about 500 miles away.

However, the group said that political, economic or social advantages might make the risk worthwhile.

Camu said special steps must be taken to control shipping in the area to prevent major disasters.

"Once you have that, I think you must take the risk or there won't be any economic development anywhere," he said.

Some people were saying that supertankers would create more serious oil pollution than smaller vessels.

But, other experts had said the larger ships would reduce the numbers of vessels travelling and therefore cut down on the danger of collision.

LOOSE CABOOSE is one more indicator of the memorabilia boom, this time representing a railway buff's approach. Surplus car was spotted en route by highway to new role as surfside cabin in Puget Sound area.

The Bottleologists

... Followers of a glass-strewn trail

Today, where once the placerman searched for gold, the bottle prospector searches for buried treasures in the middens left by the illustrious miner of a century ago. Distinguishing the hand-moulded bottles of the turn-of-the-century from the machine-made bottles of 1903 and after, indentifying various types of moulds, imperfections and marks are an exciting part of this intriguing, and sometimes profitable, hobby.

The bottle trail can be traced from the earthen vessels found in the middens of the Coastal Indians, through the treasures of the Spanish Conquistadors, up the Fraser Canyon to the Yale gold strike of 1858, into the goldfields of the Cariboo during the 1860's, across the Selkirks to the multi-million dollar gold rush of 1864 on the Wild Horse, to the Telegraph Trail to the Klondike of 1898. It's this fascinating historical travelogue in bottles and broken glass that bears the germ of the "bottle-bug."

Many start their search for collectors' pieces in the comfort of their own home! They check the Classified Pages of Victoria's daily newspapers regularly for the many interesting items for sale or trade. This buying, selling and trading are an exciting part of the hunt for that special "find" at the end of the "bottleologist's" rainbow.

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

Dear Dr. Miller: At what stage, when your dog has become pregnant, is it best to vaccinate her so that she will best be able to protect her babies? We worry a little about this because her sisters all died from distemper. — P.F.

Dear P.F.: There is no "good" time to vaccinate a pregnant bitch. Undesirable side effects could occur which would be detrimental to her developing young. Having waited this long, you had better wait now until right after she has whelped for those vital vaccinations.

Dear Dr. Miller: Ralphy was given to us. We wondered at the time why we were getting an expensive gift like a rhesus monkey. Now we know. Ralphy bites. We have learned to love him in spite of this but it would be a lot less painful if we could get his fangs pulled out. Can this operation be done? He's a great animal otherwise. — D.B.

Dear D.B.: Removing Ralphy's canine (fangs) teeth would be detrimental to his health. They could, however, be considerably shortened. When properly done, this procedure greatly minimizes the damage done by a bite yet wouldn't ruin Ralphy. Of course the process requires a general anaesthetic; most of the canine tooth is cut off. A hole is drilled in the tooth pulp which is then filled with amalgam. This filling should prevent root infection and maintain the tooth in healthy condition.

A Vanishing Life-Style Means a Boom for Macao

MACAO (NYT)—Portugal's tiny outpost on the South China coast in experiencing its first economic boom in nearly three centuries, but the local Portuguese are cast in the role of bemused, even mournful bystanders.

"Macao is no longer Macao," lamented an official in the shuttered Governor's Office, a spacious colonial structure whose facade has been washed in a delicat pink pastel, inspired by the memory of some distant Iberian port.

There was a time when all the buildings on the Praia Grande, the shaded waterfront avenue on which it stands, shared that same inspiration. Now many of them are being pulled down and replaced with non-descript apartment houses inspired by nothing but the promise of a fast return.

The regrets the Portuguese feel for the old buildings and a vanishing life style is deepened by the fact that they will share in very little of those returns, for Macao's boom is almost purely a Chinese phenomenon.

Chinese capital is behind the apartment houses, just as it is behind the casinos, the fleet of hydrofoils that come skimming across the muddy Pearl River estuary with the gamblers and tourists from Hong Kong, the textile factories and an impressive protfolio of plans for further investment.

Some of the capital is local, much of it comes from Hong Kong. Investors are confident not only because they believe the Government in Peking has no plans to renounce the perpetual grant of six square miles that the Portuguese finally obtained from the Ching Dynasty in 1887, after they had already been here for 330 years. They also know that Peking will not allow Portugal to exert what remains of her tattered authority.

In practical terms that means that business and personal taxes will stay low and it will remain a simple matter to shift profits out of the territory without ever entering them on the ledgers of a Portuguese bank. Portugal has no diplomatic relations with China, no leverage and no illusions, for China exhibited her control of the local population at the start of the Cultural Revolution in 1966 when local Red Guards rioted here.

The spectacle of a captive colonial power and a good investor climate based on the Cultural Revolution may seem anomalous, but there is nothing very new in the situation for the Portuguese who haven't really flourished here since 1685, when they lost their monopoly on trade with Canton.

Of the population of about 250,000, fewer than 7,500 are classed as Portuguese and of those, fewer than 1,000 are actually Portugese from Europe, the rest are Macaenese, Portuguese-speaking Eurasians.

Much of the current boom here is founded on Hong Kong's anti-gambling statutes. This year there will be more than 1.5 million visits to Macao by Chinese from Hong Kong, which has a population of only four million. The overwhelming majority are lured here solely by the six casinos, which never shut down.

By any standard, the gambling is ferocious. A few weeks ago a young Chinese man walked away from the baccarat table at the Lisboa Hotel after having won 1,170,000 patacas, or $234,000, in a single sitting. As a result of such exploits, the Chinese managers of the gambling syndicate recently thought it prudent to reduce the maximum baccarat bet to $12,000.

Virtually from the Lisboa Hotel's front door, a long concrete span stretches towards two thinly populated islands, Taipa and Coloane, which account for about half Macao's area. The bridge is due to be finisfied in the spring and Chinese entrepreneurs are already lining up with plans for an industrial park, a deep-water harbor, a new resort and, of course, another casino.

RAIL THRUST INTO NORTH

British Columbia's railway thrust into the resource-rich northwest area of the province is expected to have an economic impact on the Prairies by broadening the Pacific export potential.

A $325 million 10-year federal-provincial plan to extend a railway system to the Yukon border will open up 27 million acres of mineral and forest land east of the Alaska panhandle.

Prince Rupert, just south of the panhandle, is to be developed into a major Pacific port to handle exports from the region and ease growing pressures on Vancouver.

For northern Alberta especially, the rail, road and port program will mean better services for products moving to the coast. A northern port could handle Prairie petroleum, agriculture, coal and manufactured goods.

"We have long felt this would be an important step in opening up Western Canada," says the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce.

But a B.C. railway to the Yukon may also be a flanking move that could pull the rug out from Edmonton, long considered the transportation gateway to the North.

Projected northern development, including Mackenzie Valley natural gas and oil pipelines, will require economic and reliable supply networks.

Any advantage B.C. gains on Alberta in supplying the North is a major disadvantage to Edmonton, one official said.

Northern terminus of the B.C. rail line is to be Lower Post, on the B.C.-Yukon border. That could be a jump-off point for a federal railway into the Yukon htat may eventually connect with a privately-owned narrow-gauge line between Skagway, Alaska, and Whitehorse.

Lower Post was suggested by B.C. Premier Dave Barrett earlier this year as the starting point for an oil-carrying railway to ferry oil from Alaska to southern markets. His dream evaporated with U.S. approval of the trans-Alaska pipeline and tanker oil transportation, but it may not be lost forever.

The province will be footing the bill for $135 million of the joint railway plan, which could generate 18,000 jobs in resource industries. Another 17,000 jobs could follow in the service industry.

Scottish Oil To Flow

LONDON (Reuter) — Britain's North Sea oil fields have the capacity to yield at least 70 million tons of oil a year as a result of confirmed discoveries, the government said Friday.

The Scottish Office said that production should start next year in the Argyll oil field, 200 miles from Edinburgh, which has an estimated production capacity of three million tons a year.

The four largest oil fields — Forties, Brent, Thistle and Piper — should start production in 1975 or early 1976.

Flood Kills 4

ENID, Okla. (AP) — Four deaths were confirmed here and thousands of persons in the north central portion of the state were left homeless Thursday night in one of the worst floods in Oklahoma history. More than a half-dozen north central communities were partially inundated following record rains ranging up to nearly 16 inches at Enid. The Red Cross said damage to residential areas of Enid, a city of 45,000, will amount to $3.8 million.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.
He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.
PSALM 23

KLATT — In loving memory of a very dear Dad and Grandpa, who was called to heaven October 13th, 1964.
A cluster of precious memories
Sprinkled with love and tears,
Wishing God had spared you
If only a few more years.
You left a beautiful memory
And sorrow too great to behold
And to us who loved you so dearly
Your memory will never grow old.
—Loved and remembered by daughter Valerie, son-in-law George Jacob, grandsons Alex and Bruce, grand-daughter Cathie Calgaro.

PAINTER — In loving memory of a dear husband, and father, Bertram H. Painter, who passed away October 14th, 1969.

These are the memories we tenderly hold.
Deep in our hearts his memory is kept
To Love, to Cherish and never forget.
—Still sadly missed by his Loving Wife Gladys, Margaret and Albert.

SMITH — In loving memory of Jack who passed away October 1972.
More and More each day we miss him;
Friends may think the wound is healed;
But they little know the sorrow
Lies within our hearts concealed.
—Sadly missed by his wife, Prim, and Jackie, Doug and David.

WARREN — Treasured memories of our dear mother, May, who passed away October 13, 1966.
Remembrance is a golden chain,
Death tries to break, but all in vain;
To have, to love, and then to part,
Is the greatest sorrow of one's heart.
The years may wipe out many things
But this they wipe out never
The memory of those happy days
When we were all together.
—The Family

60 SEAT DINING LOUNGE
BEAUTIFUL LIVING QUARTERS
STRIKING DECOR

This is one of this areas most striking and beautifully appointed licensed dining lounges. Present owners have spent many thousands expanding and revamping the kitchen. Although they serve only one setting an evening, this should be promoted to cover two or three settings. Owner's must sell for health reasons. The living quarters are spotless, bright, and restful, with two bedrooms, kitchen, and huge living room, opening onto your own upper level patio. Main dining room has separate office with 2-pce. bathroom for manager's hideaway. Extra suite off main floor is suitable for live-in chef or for future expansion. Unattached matching building easily adapted to separate lounge on approval. Owners will accept house, motel equity, or mortgages for their $117,000 equity. Two extra lots with commercial zoning may be optioned. Hurry on this. Business has more than doubled in past year, and far from its potential. Asking $149,000. Or try $40,000 down with new indicated financing. F. WILLS 598-3344.

Come for Tea —Chinese MD

By STEWART MacLEOD

PEKING (CP) — When a Canadian becomes ill in Peking it would be simple to call on the official doctor travelling with Prime minister Trudeau. But that would be a bit like coming half way around the world and asking for a Canadian restaurant.

"Where can I get a doctor?" asked a feverish reporter to his female interpreter.

"I am sorry," she replied, "there are none on this floor of the hotel.

"You will have to go up one floor on the elevator."

"Can you make an appointment for me?" the reporter asked.

"There's no need for that. He is waiting for you."

One floor up, the white-coated physician was waiting at the open door. Through the interpreter, along with a few dabs into English, he said he was sorry that illness had struck a visitor to China. he was about 35, warm and smiling.

A description of symptoms, please?

Well, there is this sore chest, upset stomach, fever and general state of feeling lousy.

"Ah, ha!"

Out come the stethescope and the thermometer, while the interpreter smiled reassuringly. The patient began to remove his suit jacket.

AVOID CHILLS

"No, no," said the doctor, and after listening for a few moments the interpreter explained that the doctor didn't want the patient to feel chilled.

There was an exhaustive series of questions about past illnesses, drugs used and family histories. Then he slipped a hand deftly under the patient's shirt collar and planted the thermometer under an armpit.

This eased the traditional problem of answering questions with a mouthful of thermometer.

He quickly loosened the patient's tie and slipped the stethescope down to the chest. He moved it around, listening attentively. Then, he pulled up a shirttail and the instrument was sliding around the patient's back, his jacket still buttoned.

There were several problems with the patient, including a bad cold and an infected throat. A prescription would have to be prepared "because when you are busy away from home, and it is impossible to get your normal rest, extra precautions must be taken."

"Can you give me the drugs here?" asked the patient.

"I am sorry, no." There were visions of an immediate crisis, before he added: "You will have to go across the hall where I will fill your prescription."

FILLS PRESCRIPTION

He led the way, a perfect host as he opened the doors.

In this room, he opened a large cabinet door, glanced at his prescription and filled it. Meanwhile, a woman doctor stepped into the room, and they both consulted about the patient. She immediately took another look at the throat.

"Say ah again."

While the first doctor began filling three different pill containers, the new doctor pulled out something that looked like a burp gun. A purple light shone from it.

"Ultra-violet ray," she said. And for 30 seconds the patient maintained an "ah" while the light washed out his throat.

By this time the pills were ready. Through the interpreter, the doctor explained what each one was for. It was a difficult exercise but it became clear that one was an antibiotic and another was a pain-killer. The third had to remain a mystery.

"Come back tomorrow for more throat treatment," said the doctor.

"You are very busy," he said. "Come anytime and I'll be waiting for you."

He smiled warmly and invited the patient to tea.

By the next day there was a spectacular improvement in the patient's condition and it didn't cost a cent.

Propane Gas Bubble Bursts

EDMONTON (CP) — It took three cold days last December to turn propane, an unmarketable byproduct of Alberta's natural gas industry, into a high-demand energy product.

Propane producers, who had been burning their product or reinjecting it into gas fields, suddenly had a market in the energy-short United States.

Prosperity appeared on the horizon—until Thursday, when the federal government imposed export controls on propane, butane and heavy fuel oils. The controls were necessary, Ottawa said, to ensure that Canada is not left short of the commodities because of increased exports to high-priced U.S. markets.

But C. S. Dunkley, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada and vice-president of Dome Petroleum Ltd., a major propane exporter, said Friday the controls

Password . . . To Heroin

The jargon of the street drug scene came to life in Victoria provincial court Friday afternoon when an RCMP undercover agent gave evidence in the first day of a drug trial.

The trial involved a 21-year-old Edmonton man, David Aubrey Dublanko, facing two counts of trafficking in heroin.

RCMP Constable Patrick Convey told the court he and his partner, Constable William Bidon, carried out underground drug work in Victoria this summer and that on July 23 they approached the accused who was sitting in a car parked on Langley.

"Do you got?" Convey said he asked the man.

He explained to Judge Edmond St. Jorre the phrase was the password for someone wanting heroin.

"Yeah, I got," came the reply.

"You guys don't mind showing me your tracks?" Convey said the man requested.

They rolled up their shirt sleeves revealing a clump of needle marks. They were self-inflicted to simulate an addict's scars, Convey added.

"Okay, jump in! Let's go," the man in the car said.

They drove to Yates, where the driver spotted a person and whistled him over to the car. The four of them went along Wharf to Johnston and finally stopped at a house on Pandora.

"How much for a cap?" Convey said he asked during the trip.

"$40 . . . how much you guys want?"

"Two caps."

Convey said the accused went into the house and returned.

"I handed him four $20 bills with my left hand; he dumped two small white caps in my right," he said.

After examining them he put the caps in a condom and placed the package under his tongue and drove to a drive-in where he went into a washroom and transferred the condom to his pocket.

When he returned to his apartment, he said, he labelled the package, sealed it, and five days later sent it to the drug laboratory in Vancouver for analysis.

The day following the purchase Bidon and Convey were sitting in the Churchill Hotel beer parlor when the accused joined them.

"The accused asked Bidon if we were still looking to score (to take a fix of heroin)," Convey said.

"Not now," Carey said they answered explaining they were waiting for a "chick."

However Bidon relented.

"How much?" he asked, Convey said.

"$40."

"Okay."

Convey said Bidon took out $40 and was starting to count it out when the accused said, "No, not here, let's take a walk."

"We asked him if he had any stuff on him and he said, "Yeah, it's under the tablecloth," Convey said.

The case was adjourned at that point to Tuesday to fix a new date for continuation of trial. One more crown witness must be heard.

The trial had been expected to be completed Friday but was delayed when a legal tussle developed between prosecutor Mike Hutchison and Judge St. Jorre.

The judge questioned whether certain parts of Convey's evidence should not be received in a "voir dire," a trial within a trial where evidence produced by a person in authority may be first tested.

St. Jorre said a mountie was a figure of authority 24 hours a day regardless of his appearance or guise and thus any statements the accused allegedly made to him may not have been given voluntarily. The voir dire would decide if they were voluntary or not.

Hutchison said: "It takes me by complete surprise. Never has a voir dire been ordered before in such a case."

Replied St. Jorre: "It smacks to me of unfairness when an undercover police officer squeezes a person like a lemon trying to get everything out of him."

Court recessed for 15 minutes. When it reconvened Hutchison cited precedents and after a short discussion St. Jorre ordered the trial continued, without a trial within a trial.

TAKEN ABOARD SPACECRAFT, SAY WORKERS

PASCAGOULA, Miss. (UPI) — Two shipyard workers say they were taken aboard a glowing blue spacecraft by buzzing creatures with silvery, wrinkled skin. Sheriff Fred Diamond is sure "something did happen to them."

"These are reliable people," Diamond said. "They had no reason to say this if it had not been true. I know something did happen to them."

"I was scared and I'm still scared and shook up over it," said one of the men, Charles Hickson, 42. "I've never experienced anything like that and I hope I don't ever again."

Whatever happened took place around 7 p.m. Thursday while Hickson and Calvin Parker, 19, were fishing off an old pier on the west bank of the Pascagoula River near here. They said they saw a strange object approaching in the sky, emitting a bluish haze, and then were taken inside the craft by the three creatures.

Both men were questioned at length by the Jackson County sheriff's office but were reluctant to talk to newsmen. However, they consented to a brief, filmed interview with Biloxi television station WLOX-TV.

"All of a sudden we heard something like a buzzing sound," said Hickson, "and I saw what looked like a bright, flashing blue light. It looked bluish to me. All of a sudden it seemed to stop."

He said it appeared to be "hovering" a few feet over the ground and "one end just opened . . . and I saw three things coming out. They seemed to be floating across the water a couple of feet high."

"Before I knew it they were on me and two of them had me by each arm and immediately I was lifted from the ground. I was quite scared. It's hard to recall exactly what did happen."

He said he was carried to the "vehicle" where he was examined by "some kind of instrument . . . it reminded me of a big eye" which "covered my entire body."

He said he was not harmed and "didn't have any sensation whatsoever. I was just helpless."

THICK SMOKE rolling from cannery ablaze in Tecumseh, Ont., Friday marks part of $10 million loss reported by Green Giant of Canada. Also lost in the fire was one of the company's warehouses in factory near Windsor.

Outrage, Problems Meet Act

Outrage was the reaction of al three opposition parties at the Petroleum Corporation Act introduced into the legislature Friday, but the companies directly affected saw no insurmountable problems.

"We're heading — not walking, not even running, but galloping headfirst — into a complete socialist state in B.C.," said Don Phillips (SC—South Peace River).

"They will have created such a jungle of bureaucracy and corporations that it will take years to untangle," Phillips said.

The act sets up a provincial crown corporation with power to buy and sell all natural gas and petroleum in B.C.

The proposed corporation would have wide powers to build or lease refineries and pipelines, and to participate in natural gas and petroleum production right from exploration through to distribution and marketing.

"This bill spells the end of private initiative in any of the fields of exploration," said provincial Liberal leader David Anderson.

Anderson said he was "aghast" at the bill, and called it the first step towards a total takeover of all resource industries.

He predicted the NDP government will introduce a similar bill allowing the takeover of the mining industry within six months, and another alowing takeover of the forest industry either just before or just after the next election.

"The powers in it (the bill) will create a great energy shortage in B.C.," said Conservative spokesman Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay).

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, who introduced the bill, said the first job of the corporation would be to raise the price of natural gas.

In effect, the petroleum corporation will be inserted between a number of gas producers and the sole pipeline company, Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd.

Kelly Gibson, chairman of Westcoast and of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. said the plan is "fraught with problems. I didn't think any of it is insurmountable, but it's not as easy as just saying it and walking on down the hill."

He added it was no surprise and that the companies would co-operate with the government.

The two companies will be the ones most affected by the new corporation. Westcoast, a federally incorporated company is the only wholesale buyer and transporter of natural gas in B.C. Pacific Pete, with B.C. incorporation, is the largest producer in B.C. and the largest supplier to Westcoast in which it holds a 25.7 per cent interest.

Museum Grants Awarded City

Federal museum grants totalling $73,650 have been awarded to three Victoria centres to improve exhibition standards and to get exhibits travelling throughout Canada.

The Greater Victoria Art Gallery will get $32,650 to help it continue its activities as associate museum to the National Museum of Canada.

A Gallery spokesman said today it is too early to tell exactly what the money would be budgeted for but some of it will go towards administrative expenses of the new extension program.

The Maritime Museum of B.C., housed in the old court house in Victoria, was awarded $25,000 to cover part of its operational deficit and to continue refurbishing and improving the display of the collection.

Maritime Museum director Col. J. W. D. Symons said today the grant is essential to the operation of the museum.

"We can't run the building as a money-making venture, no museum can. Without federal grants, we would have to close down completely."

Symons said some of the money will go to raise the salaries of staff members and to increase staff. The grant will also help the museum set up a program in conjunction with the Provincial Musuem to exchange exhibits with other centres in Canada.

The Provincial Museum was awarded $16,000 to provide salaries during the training period of two people who will be hired to prepare, organize and teach museum classes, supervise programs, promote lectures series and provide consultation to other museums in the province.

Accused Said Fit

NANAIMO — A man charged with robbing a Nanaimo bank Sept. 7 has been declared fit to stand trial after a 30-day psychiatric examination.

Robert William Rae, 52, of Ladysmith, was charged after a man waving a toy pistol entered the bank, demanded money and escaped with almost $2,000.

Minutes later, police arrested a man and recovered toy pistol and cash.

Group Gets $6,000; Now How to Use It?

More than 40 people attending the first general meeting of Gordon Head New Horizons group Friday took the first steps towards launching a program for the elderly in the area.

President Barrie Goult said today the meeting was primarily to find out what senior citizens in the area want to do with a $6,000 federal grant.

Another meeting will be held in about two weeks to present a detailed budget and specific times and dates of activities to the members.

"We hope to make the parish church hall an activity centre — it has the facilities and it would be a shame to waste it," Goult said.

"As well, we'll try to get into the arts and crafts and other indoor activities and spend some of the money on field trips to historic places of interest."

The group has been promised another $6,000 federal grant if the program proves successful.

Goult feels there is a potential membership of about 400 people from the Gordon Head area.

"We hope to get all the people back from the first meeting and also get all the people the original ones have talked to."

Burnley Wins, Leeds Draws

LONDON (Reuter) — First Division newcomer Burnley redoubled its pursuit of leading Leeds United in English League soccer by beating Queen's Park Rangers 2-1 Saturday to cut the gap at the top of the table to two points.

Leeds, recovering after conceding two goals in the first 19 minutes, drew 2-2 with Leicester City and remained the only unbeaten First Division team with 19 points from 11 matches.

Leicester, unbeaten at home to Leeds since 1959, stormed into an early 2-0 lead with goals by Frank Worthington and Alan Birchenall, but Mick Jones and Billy Bremner levelled the scores for Leeds before half-time.

Jewelry Thieves Strike Again

For the second time in recent weeks a jewelry store in the Victoria area was robbed by what police consider a professional group of gemstone shoplifters.

A small tray of diamond rings was stolen from Grassie Jewellers, 1209 Douglas, late Thursday afternoon, police said Friday.

The tray had been taken between 4:30 and 5 p.m. from a display counter.

The loss, originally estimated at $6,000 by police, is actually only about half that amount, a Grassie spokesman said.

More than $8,000 worth of rings were stolen Sept. 26 from Peoples Credit Jewellers in the Hillside shopping plaza when three trays were shoplifted.

Both thefts bear similarities to other thefts that have plagued jewellry stores throughout the lower mainland over the past six months.

Electronic Gadgets Play Role in War

WASHINGTON (WP) — The dark art of electronic warfare—so secret that little is written about it will help decide who wins the latest Arab-Israeli war.

The war communiques from both Cairo and Tel Aviv do tell that Egypt's missiles are pitted against Israel's planes in the battle for the Sinai, with losses of Israel's "flying artillery" of utmost concern to Tel Aviv.

But the communiques cannot describe the grim but silent struggle as technocrats on both sides try to give their fighting men the upper hand with modern weapons that can mean the difference between victory and defeat.

And how this part of the war comes out will provide a fresh measure of the relative merits of Russia and U.S. weapons—a crucial measurement in this age when each super-power is hostage to the other's military might.

Egypt is counting on its Soviet-made anti-aircraft missiles—the SA-2 Guideline, SA-3 and SA-6 Gainful to offset Israel's American-made F-4 and A-4 fighter bombers as well as some French-supplied aircraft.

Israel is counting on tactics and electronics to keep Egypt's missilemen from knocking down too many of its planes so it can carry out its war plan to rely primarily on firepower from the air.

The SA-2 for high altitude shooting and the SA-3 for low altitude have been around for so long that Israel has armed itself with electronic counter measures to foil them, as did the United States when it came up against the SA-2 in Vietnam.

But the SA-6 is a newer anti-aircraft missile, although Russia showed it as far back as the May Day parade of Nov. 7, 1967.

So the most challenging part of Israel's battle is to foil this SA-6.

Starting with the fundamentals of electronic warfare, the "eyes" of today's modern missiles are radar short for radio detecting and ranging. One type, called acquisition radar, goes out a long way to search for an invading aircraft and acquire it in the form of a blip on a radar scope.

Another type tracks the plane and a third guides the missile fired at it the fire control radar.

Two basic techniques for fouling up these radars are to fuzz up the gunner's screen—like blurring your home television set or to make the blip he is tracking appear far from its actual location.

But to perform these and lots of other electronic cat-and-mouse tricks effectively, the invader must know a lot about the radar being used against him—such as frequency, power level and width of the pulse.

Israel and the United States do know those things about the SA-2 and SA-3. Collecting such electronic intelligence was the mission of the U.S.S. Liberty shot up during the six-day war of 1967; the U.S.S. Pueblo captured off North Korea in 1968, and the EC-121 spy plane shot down by North Korea in 1969.

A standard technique is to tape radar signals from anti-aircraft batteries so that specialists back in the laboratory can figure out ways to disrupt them.

But, to do this, the enemy tracking and fire control radar must be turned on.

Modern nations for decades have been playing an electronic game of "chicken," such as flying planes at another country's air defences to provoke anti-aircraft batteries into turning on their radar so the signals can be recorded.

But this game of chicken costs lives, with the U.S.S. Liberty and Navy EC-121 only two of many examples of men killed collecting electronic intelligence.

Israel, if the SA-6 is indeed taking a toll on its aircraft as Pentagon specialists believe, now must collect more information on the SA-6 and design counter-measures against the weapon.

Leisure Report Released

A two-volume report on leisure activities in Greater Victoria has been completed and sent to municipal recreation directors for study.

Dr. Colin Campbell, formerly of the University of Victoria geography department and now with the provincial parks branch, was director of the study.

Campbell and five research assistants surveyed 12,000 people in the area over the summer on their leisure activities.

The report, which will be released at a meeting of the intermunicipal recreation committee next month, is said to recommend a more co-ordinated approach to recreation needs among the municipalities.

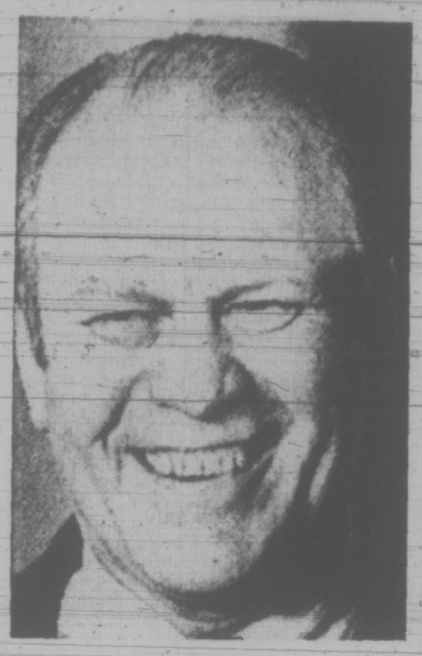
Nixon Loses Appeal



Ford

Football Star To V-P

Times News Services

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A federal appeals court Friday told President Nixon he has no constitutional right to keep his Watergate tapes from a grand jury unless he can prove that releasing them may harm U.S. national security.

The U.S. circuit court of appeals for the District of Columbia ordered Nixon to surrender the tapes to chief U.S. district Judge John J. Sirica, ruling that only the courts can determine whether any part of them may be kept secret.

"To leave the proper scope and application of executive privilege to the president's sole discreton would represent a mixing, rather than a separation of executive and judicial functions . . ." the court said in an unsigned 41-page opinion.

"The constitution mentions no executive privileges, much less any absolute executive privileges."

Nixon's insistence that his political mandate and the constitution give him an absolute right to keep anything he chooses secret, the court said, "are invitations to re-fashion the constitution, and we reject them."

Anticipating a certain White House appeal to the Supreme Court, the court stayed its order directing Nixon to surrender the tapes for five days.

The decision was issued in the name of all seven judges who heard the historic case. But two of them, Nixon oppointees George Mackinnon and Malcolm Wilkey, attached separate opinions totalling 144 pages disagreeing strongly with the court's reasoning in reaching its decision.

The court urged Nixon and Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox—who is seeking tape recordings of nine Nixon conversations with his aides—to try again to reach agreement about which portions should go to the grand jury. Previous efforts at out-of-court settlement collapsed three weeks ago.

Should renewed efforts fail, the court said, Nixon must cooperate with Sirica who ruled Aug. 26 that Nixon must submit the tapes to him for review. The appeals court said Nixon "may decline to transmit that portion of the material" in the tapes that "relates to national defense or foreign relations."

But it said Cox would be entitled to "inspect" the president's claim of secrecy for such material and that Sirica would decide whether the claim were valid.

A spokesman for Cox said he was "very pleased with the decision" and agreed that another attempt at negotiations should be made.

WASHINGTON—President Nixon Friday picked for vice-president a former football star whose Congressional record is so popular he will have little trouble getting majority approval from his colleagues.

Selection of republican wheel-horse and minority House leader Gerald R. Ford, 60, to succeed the resigned Spiro T. Agnew was welcomed by members of Congress with such acclaim the Michigan member might be sworn into office well before the end of October.

The nomination was formally submitted to the Senate and House today. Both chambers were meeting in rare sessions to formally receive the nomination.

It was immediately routed to committee — the judiciary committee in the House and the rules committee in the Senate.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield predicted the nomination would be approved "by the end of the month." The House was expected to act equally swiftly.

In making his selection, Nixon clearly wanted to avoid a major clash with Congress at a time when he is seeking to recover from the Watergate political scandal.

"It is vital that we turn away from the obsessions of the past and turn to the great challenges of the future," said Nixon in his announcement speech.

Warning of the dangers that confront America, Nixon said "This is a time for a new beginning for America, a new beginning in which we all dedicate ourselves to the task of meeting the challenges we face, seizing

Timber Taxes Hiked $30M

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

The provincial government announced Friday a new system of appraising stumpage rates for timber which will bring in an extra $30 million a year from logging operators.

Resources Minister Robert Williams unveiled a new "wood resource system," which he said is designed to establish the true value of the province's timber stands.

The system takes effect Monday in the Interior region, which accounts for about half of the timber cut in the province. More recent statistics show that the Interior region, which takes in about 80 per cent of the province's area, accounts for about $1.3 billion worth of timber products per year.

The principal effect of the new system is to eliminate the extremely low stumpage rates paid by logging operators for small, low-grade timber. This kind of wood accounts for 38 per cent of the total amount of wood cut in the Interior region, Williams said.

The low-grade wood formerly cost logging operators only 55 cents per cunit (100 cubic feet of wood). Williams said this amount of wood, converted for example into 100 pieces of eight-foot-long two-by-four lumber, fetches prices of as much as $144, money which goes directly to the logging operators who have had to pay the government only the 55 cents in stumpage rates.

"Fifty-five-cent wood in this day and age is entirely unacceptable," Williams said.

The other main steps in the new system:

—Minimum and maximum stumpage rate structures are altered, with the maximum amount chargeable to a logging operator now an open-ended figure.

—Logging operators will be able to recover costs incurred by construction of logging roads faster than under the previous system.

—Log values will include the value of lumber, pulp chips and pulp logs instead of just lumber production as under the previous system.

The new system is effective Monday for each timber-cutting licence which comes up for renewal. Licences have always come up every two years, but will now be renewed each year.

Before a figure for stumpage rate is arrived at by the B.C. Forest Service, consideration will be given to the individual operator's costs of production, the condition of the trees in the stand he is cutting and a calculation of a "reasonable profit" for the operator.

Williams was asked if this type of formula is not a sophisticated means of imposing profit controls on the forest industry.

"You could call it that if we did not own the trees," he said. "But we own the trees so this is just a sophisticated method of determining the value of the trees which the people of the province own."

He described the new stumpage system as "not a tax — it's a price for the raw materials they (logging operators) need for their industry."

"The new system is not just an increase in the price that the people of the province will receive — important as that is — but a rational system that relates to the real values and real costs of operating," Williams said.

The minister said that

CEASEFIRE PERSONAL

PREK THNOT RIVER, Cambodia (AP) — A Cambodian government company commander and an officer of the Khmer Rouge Communist-led insurgents have established their own personal ceasefire along the Prek Thnot River, Phnom Penh's southern defence line.

The government company commander, a second lieutenant, said of himself and the Communist officer: "We both want peace and to be friends."

The lieutenant said the Khmer Rouge battalion commander called him on the radio four days ago and asked if there were any Americans fighting with him.

When the answer was no, the insurgent commander said he was tired of the war and did not want to kill Cambodians.

The two men then agreed via the radio not to shoot at one another's position.

The government lieutenant said: "My commander orders me to attack across the river every day, but why should my company go first? I have a ceasefire."

The Khmer Rouge insurgent commander, Lt.-Col. Sau Kon, on the south side of the river near Kompong Kantuout, 13 miles southwest of Phnom Penh, said on the radio that it was difficult to talk about peace because his North Vietnamese commanders will learn of it.

Kompong Kantuot was the scene of heavy fighting from Sept. 19 until Oct. 6 when anti-government troops forced government units north across the Prek Thnot River.

Jordan Enters War

Times News Services

Jordan entered the war against Israel today by sending a contingent of its best troops to Syria where Israeli armored columns broke through Syrian lines on a 60-mile front, crushed an Iraqi tank force and drove to within less than 20 miles of Damascus.

An Amman announcement said King Hussein had sent a "group of our most efficient military formations" into Syria but there was no immediate indication Hussein had thrown his full 75,000-man army or 200-plane air force into the struggle or that he was opening a third front against Israel.

Amman's announcement came as Israeli tanks backed by heavy air power battled up the road to Damascus and as dogfights raged over the Golan battleground. Tel Aviv said an Iraqi armored unit, part of an expeditionary force sent to Syria, had been crushed.

When Hussein opened a third front in the 1967 war he lost old Jerusalem and the west bank and saw the total destruction of his army and air force.

The announcement was broadcast over Amman Radio exactly one week after Egyptian armored units crossed the Suez Canal into the Sinai and Syrian tanks attacked on a broad front in the Golan Heights.

Jordan said Hussein's move was aimed at protecting the Syrian front by preventing Israel from occupying the frontier hills which would also threaten Jordon, and to "freeze" a large number of Israeli troops along the 360-mile-long Israeli-Jordan frontier.

There was no immediate Israeli reaction although Israel Radio broke into a military commentary to broadcast coded messages to reserves not yet called up. The commentary itself was telling how the Iraqis abandoned 80 tanks when the Israelis attacked northeast of Damascus.

Damascus communiques emphasized the intense air war over Syria and reported "violent ground battles" without giving a hint of how they were going. In Cairo a loud explosion sounded, followed immediately by an air raid alert and an all clear. There was no explanation.

The Israelis earlier reported that they encountered Iraqi reinforcements on the Syrian front lines, probably elements of a full 13,000 to 15,000-man division in the area. Israel speculated that the Iraquis were being used to replace Syrian soldiers who have been pulled back toward Damascus.

Associated Press correspondent Paul Kohn said the route to Damascus was littered with wrecked Syrian tanks and charred bodies and that Syrian soldiers were surrendering to the Jewish forces. Based on reports from the Israeli command and from correspondents, Damascus was nearly within range of the Israelis' 175-millimetre howitzers.

In the Sinai Desert theatre, an Israeli communique reported "local armor and artillery duels" Friday but little ground action. Egypt said it destroyed 32 tanks and armored cars and killed or wounded 200 Israelis in desert action Friday.

An Egyptian communique also said that its forces sank three Israeli missile boats and

RAIN CURTAIN FALLS ON INDIAN SUMMER

While Victorians grumbled about the rain, weatherman Michael Dolan this morning found a silver lining.

As long as "moist air" continues to flow from the Pacific, said Dolan, there isn't any danger of a freeze-up or snow.

In the last 24 hours the weather office at Victoria International Airport has recorded 1.69 inches of rain — most of it Friday night.

For the next few days Victorians can prepare for cloudy skies, more rain and "perhaps some heavy downpours," said Dolan.

The rainy season is definitely here, he said, and there's little chance for a late Indian summer.

Tourists Stay To Watch War

By GERALD CLARK
Editor of Montreal Star
Special to The Times

TEL AVIV — This war, apart from any official name it earns, can be called the Tourist War. A surprisingly large number of tourists are floating about Israel, not, of course, on the northern or southern fronts, but in some instances sufficiently close to the action to qualify as committed observers.

For instance, there is the case of a girl named Daren Chentow from Syracuse, New York. Daren, aged 18, was in a kibbutz, Kafar Blum in the Upper Galilee, when hostilities erupted and Syrian tanks came into bitter combat with Israeli tanks not too many miles away.

She managed to reach her parents on an overseas line to say she was all right and so were comrades from various parts of the United States and Canada. Then she read her father, Irving Chentow, a list of people to ring to relay messages their children were well, including, he recalls ruefully, someone in Saskatchewan, so that he estimates his phone bill ran into hundreds of dollars.

But the point is that he pleaded with Daren to return home immediately and she refused. She was not going to run out of newly-made Israeli friends. Chentow seized the first available flight from New York — in fact, that was when I met him — and on landing at Lod he set out for Kafar Blum on a long bus ride.

Kafar Blum is not exactly an austere settlement.

While foreign youths spend a few months picking cotton or engaging in other farm chores, they also find time to relax around the pool. And it was while thus engaged that Daren snapped pictures of an aerial dogfight overhead — but that was about as close as the war reached.

I later ran into Irving Chentow quite by chance, and he, instead of dragging his daughter back to Syracuse, had decided to spend a few days himself on the kibbutz. His only worry is what his boss will say because he failed to show up for work.

Another kibbutz on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, Sof Gindsar, operates a comfortable guest house that accommodates 120 people. When the battle broke out last Sat-

Expert Sees $400 Gold

MONTREAL (UPI) — The dollar will be devalued by 20 per cent in 1974. The true dollar price of gold in 1985 will be $400 an ounce. Japan will become the strongest trading nation in the world and the Dow Jones average will pass away in 1979.

Harry Schultz, international investment analyst and former newspaper magnate predicted a bleak economic future of the American investor in has address today to the fifth international money seminar.

Schultz's speech also predicted Canada would become more independent of the United States, through diversified trade patterns.

Schultz said the dollar would be "devalued by about 20 per cent in 1974 as part of the monetary reform kick.

Gold would be officially $200 in 1985, but the dollar's power to buy foreign currency, outside the U.S., will be half of its domestic power.

Wild currency fluctuations, couple with rising socialism in the U.S. and escalating inflation will lead to the demise of the Dow Jones average, while the Internal Revenue Service finds itself powerless in the face of declining dollar values, Shultz also said.

PAY PACKETS 27-YEAR LOW

SASKATOON (CP) — The economic position of the average Canadian in terms of real income is the worst since 1946, Joseph Morris of Ottawa, executive vice-president of the Canadian Labor Congress, said Friday.

Meanwhile, he told delegates to the annual convention of the Saskatchewan Federation of Labor, corporation profits are skyrocketing.

Morris said that with half a million Canadians unemployed, prime bank rates at a record nine per cent and with the type of federal government now in power "there is unfortunately little chance of any real improvement in the situation."

B.C. Tightens Rules On Crown Leases

Citizenship requirements for persons obtaining leases and licences of crown land have been tightened.

Resources Minister Robert Williams said Friday the restrictions will reduce alienation of B.C. crown land to non-Canadians.

From now on, leases or licences of crown land will be limited to Canadian citizens or landed immigrants as will transfers of existing leases and licences.

Performance conditions will be required of non-Canadians who are given leases or licences of crown land. Ranches or land with improvments on it will be reviewed on a short term basis at the discretion of the provincial director of lands.

Corporations leasing crown land or given licences will be required to fulfil requirements of the Companies Act which say that the majority of the directors on companies must be Canadian residents and at least one director must be a resident of B.C.

Williams said "there is not much doubt among the people of the province that crown land should not be alienated to non-citizens of the province."

Fuel Shortage Goes To School

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Oregon elementary and secondary schools will be asked to close for a month this winter to conserve electricity and heating fuel, Governor Tom McCall said Friday.

In Washington U.S. Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton said there will be a national shortage of fuel this winter of between 7 and 20 per cent, depending on the weather. He predicted sharp price increases.

Trade Pact Ends China Talks

PEKING (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau concluded his official four-day visit to Peking with warm words, a new trade agreement, a private meeting with Chairman Mao Tse-tung and a new bamboo baby carriage.

In one of the busiest days of the tour, Trudeau wrapped up the Peking portion of his visit by signing the trade agreement, visiting the Forbidden City, talking for more than an hour with Chairman Mao and shopping with his wife Margaret in a downtown department store.

And the final event was a huge banquet given by Trudeau for his Chinese hosts.

"We do not assess in identical fashion all aspects of today's world," he told the grand banquet in the Great Hall of the People. "With our distinct histories, geographies and culture, it is inconceivable that we could see eye to eye on all issues — but we do agree on the fundamental need for world peace, and the equally fundamental need for all countries to determine their own fate and design their own future."

Trudeau and Premier Chou En-lai formally signed an agreement during the afternoon that is certain to increase trade between the two countries, and the prime minister revealed that a large number of other agreements had been reached which will result in a greatly stepped-up exchange of individuals between Canada and China. Canadian officials were enthusiastic about the talks which, they said, will create a whole series of new bonds between the two countries.

The effect of the general trade agreeent is to give the "most-favored-nation treatment" to goods travelling between the two countries — that is, good tariff rates. Furthermore there was agreement to establish a joint trade committee which will meet annually, and to promote the interchange of individuals and delegations engaged in trade.

TALKING TOMBSTONE

JACKSON, Mich. (UPI) — Donald Wells' tombstone doesn't just stand there.

It chats, sings, plays stereo music, shows movies and slides.

And is bulletproof.

Wells thinks it's a great idea.

"Tombstones haven't changed much since the Egyptians built pyramids for their pharoahs, he said Friday.

He applied for a patent for what he calls his talking tombstone and by next week, he said, he plans to introduce the first working model.

It is made of polycarbonate. The slides, film, tapes and stereo equipment is enclosed inside and solar batteries will operate the whole thing.

The idea, he said, is that mourners can play the voices of departed loved ones and view photos and film of them at the same time.

He said he got the idea from his father during a conversation about a tombstone for a dead relative. "Suddenly, Bingo, I got this great idea," he said.

"Anyway, it's sure better than just looking at those dull slabs," Wells said. "That's grim, man."

Exceptional Children

Given TLC in Generous Doses

Without The Labels They Progress

Singalong with teacher Corrine Carson is something all the children enjoy

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

When a school child gets singled out for special learning assistance, he runs the risk of getting labelled.

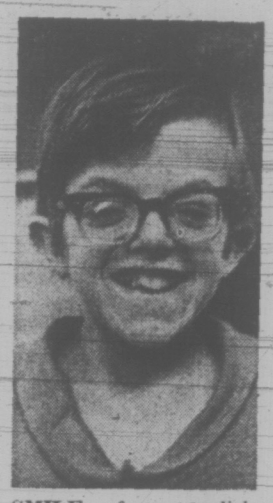
Stuck in a "special" class for slow learners or the emotionally disturbed, he can sometimes find himself called a "dummy" by the other children.

Those labels hurt a young child.

It is to avoid them that George Jay elementary school, 1118 Princess, decided to dissolve its special classes this fall and open a centre for exceptional children.

George Jay staff members are determined that going to the new centre will have no stigma attached to it, and they say they're succeeding.

"I've never had a kid coming in here saying, I'm in a dummy class, a mental class," said Ray Shergold, co-ordinator of the centre, in an interview this week.



SMILE of accomplishment lights up the face of young Fred Brown as he sees his school work improving daily.

It would be hard to pin one label on the 67 children now attending the George Jay centre.

They range from very slow learners to gifted children who learn much faster than the average.

What unites them, said Shergold, is the fact that "they can't get along in regular classrooms".

There's one boy who had a complete learning block about arithmetic that hampered his work in a regular class. In the centre for exceptional children, he's written a novel.

Another small boy is a whiz at reading any kind of book and easily memorizes whole passages, but he was just too noisy and excitable for the regular class.

A set of twins who were constant truants before they came to the centre have discovered they like school, said Shergold.

Shergold and the five teachers in the centre take each child individually to try to discover why he wasn't learning before he came to the centre.

Maybe he's a slow learner, or emotionally disturbed, or maybe he's got problems at home.

As co-ordinator, Shergold deals with social workers, psychologists, parents, and all other people concerned about each child.

The centre is a cluster of four rooms, including an office for Shergold, in one corner of the school. It's noisier than the average classroom, and the children are freer to roam around when they get restless.

One room is being set up where children can work on their perceptual motor training and improving their manipulative skills.

In it is a punching bag. When a child at the centre feels frustration building up inside him, the teachers want him to take it out on the punching bag instead of the child next to him.

Sitting in his office, Shergold has a continual stream of children popping in to proudly show him a picture they've drawn, or their writing lesson, or their reading ability.

He listens to each of them, gives them a hug, and sends them on their way.

"Most kids, all they need is a lot of TLC (tender loving care)," Shergold said. They need attention, need to feel important in someone's eyes.

Ideally the centre should have a teacher or other adult for each child, and vice-principal Don Falder said the school is thinking of bringing in some volunteer mothers.

Many children only attend the centre part-time, and spend the rest of the day in a regular class.

"We try not to pull them out of the classroom," said Shergold. "We're trying to keep them integrated."

There's a core group at the centre which could never make it in a regular class, he said, but the rest will be gradually eased back in.

Among those getting special part-time help is a group of new Canadians who are coached in their English at the centre.

Next month Shergold hopes to start a class for exceptionally gifted children.

In it a child with a special aptitude for math (or another subject) can spend part of the school day working at the centre at his own pace, learning to use a slide rule or dipping into high school math.

'We'll Do Anything' To Reach the People

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

The Victoria office of the Canadian Immigration Department makes house calls.

It's all a part of the "we'll do anything to reach the people," program to get landed status for illegal immigrants, senior immigration officer Doug Cook said today.

"It's all a matter of attitude," Cook said. "We're an immigrant-receiving country and we want people."

Since the landed immigrant registration project began Aug. 15, the Victoria office has handled 489 applicants. The amnesty offer for people who have been in the country illegally since Nov. 30, 1972, runs out Monday at midnight and Cook expects the number of registrants to climb during the weekend.

"We'll do anything we can and anything that's necessary to get people to register," he said.

That includes making house calls.

"We had a phone call one day from a rest home saying they had three elderly women patients who were retired, Roman Catholic, nuns from the States. The women had been here for years and hadn't registered and were really worried about it," Cook said.

"We sent somebody out to talk to them and now they're in the country legally."

Most of the people who walk into the office on the third floor of the federal building at 816 Government, have a story to tell.

"We had a German come in one day. He was a retired logger for MacMillan-Bloedel and had lived in Canada for a long time. He finally admitted to his wife that he was a seaman deserter and had been living here illegally all this time and she evicted him," Cook said.

"She told him she wasn't going to live with a criminal and that he had better not go home until he had registered with us—he did."

Most of the people who come to the office walk in the door glancing over their shoulder.

"They're just scared to death. They're shy and nervous and they've magnified the whole thing in their minds until they're just absolutely certain they're going to be deported."

The highest percentage of immigrants registered are from Britain, Cook said.

"They came here years ago and figured that because they were British, they didn't have to do anything except settle down here. Now they are realizing that they have actually been here illegally."

The office registered one titled British gentleman, a Queen's Counsel lawyer and a member of a prestigious Vancouver law firm.

The people registered so far come from almost every country in the world — Iran, Korea, Hong Kong, Italy, Greece, Sweden, Germany, Portugal, India, China, etc.

Many of the applicants are young American draft dodgers and deserters who didn't register when they first moved to Canada.

Immigration departments all over Canada had registered 41,189 people up to Friday night, well below the projected figure of 75-100,000.

On Vancouver Island, the forecast was closer. The department expected about 1,000 people and so far 750 have registered.

In Victoria, the immigration office will be open until 5 p.m. today, from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Sunday and from 8 a.m.-midnight Monday.

In smaller Island communities, the Manpower centres are handling the original applications and then turning them over to the Victoria office. The Manpower centres will be open all day Sunday and until midnight Monday.

"People who come in here aren't used to us," Cook said.

Statement Coming On Assault

Sooke RCMP said this morning they will release a statement later today on the circumstances surrounding the assault of a 19-year-old girl Thursday night.

The girl, whom police have declined to name, was found by a motorist lying beside the West Coast Road 10 miles west of Sooke and waving feebly for help.

Police said she was badly beaten about the face and was in a state of shock. She was taken to Victoria General Hospital where her condition today was reported as fair.

Police said the girl told them she had been hitchhiking on the Trans Canada highway that evening and a man had picked her up.

Police refused to say if they have a suspect or if charges are contemplated.

Ask The Times

Q. Could you tell me if forms for making wills, which can be purchased in stationary stores are legal? P.C.

A. The forms, which sell locally for 75 cents, are legal but not recommended unless your possessions are minimal. If jointly-owned land or life insurance policies are involved it's safer to have the will drawn by a lawyer. The standard fee for a simple will is $25. Legal fees for a more complicated will rarely exceed $50.

The Wills Act states wills may be filed with the department of vital statistics but they can be kept anywhere. They can be written on anything providing they're witnessed by two people.

Q. I've always envied women who can grow their nails long because, what with dish washing and gardening, mine are always broken off and a mess. Could you give me any idea how long nails could grow under favorable circumstances? G.W.

A. Believe it or not, the longest recorded finger nails belonged to a man—a Chinese priest living in Shanghai in 1910. He took 27 years to grow them to a length of 22 and three quarter inches! Human nails will normally grow from cuticle to cutting length in from 117 to 138 days.

Be Ready Monday!

Door-to-door canvassing for this year's United Way appeal begins Monday, with an objective of 20 per cent of the overall appeal target of $680,000.

Right now the appeal has raised $205,519, or 30 per cent of the objective, chairman Murray Glazier said today.

"Any layoff or diminuation of effort at this point in the appeal would be disastrous," Glazier said.

United Way appeal money is used to support 23 service agencies in the Victoria area.

"The work done by the canvassers in the next 10 days, and the response of the donors, will be crucial to the success of our campaign," said Glazier.

"If the canvassers will make their callbacks this will maximize the opportunity for people to give," he said.

"At the same time, we ask the person on the other side of the door to remember that all canvassers are volunteers, and be ready to respond when called on," he added.

But Are You Looking With Your Eyes?

THERE IS A WATCH BIRD WATCHING ME. Where it stands in the shallows, its head, with dagger bill and back-swept plume is higher than my short ribs. Presently it will tuck its neck into a U-curve, unfurl wings that span close to six feet, and flap solemnly off with legs trailing behind. This gangling local resident is a great blue heron or shitepoke.

We once assumed that our guests from the cities would spot the fishing heron instantly. Few do. Most don't.

Sometimes this failure to perceive reflects on overall lack of interest in the natural world. Much oftener, though, the visitor who fetches the heron into view with an assist from my wife or me is both pleased and surprised.

"You mean it's been there all the time?" he may say. "I don't know how I missed it!"

To look is not necessarily to see. Our children when small would sometimes become impatient with our perceputal denseness.

"You're not looking with your eyes," one or other would complain.

A precise statement, that, of a common human condition. With gifted exceptions, we suffer from a form of departmentalized blindness.

Preoccupation contributes to this state. The mind grinding away at other matters may not respond to the signal relayed by the eyes. A writer immersed in a novel can be so gripped by his story characters that he passes friends on the street without recognizing them. The child who tracks mud into the house isn't necessarily hell-bent on making work for his mother. His inner vision of the pirate costume he plans to wear for Halloween trick-or-treating may have obscured the present reality of muddy shoes.

Familiarity is a notable aid to perception.

The heron, no angler more patient, is part of our accustomed low-tide scene. Like the glaucus winged gulls and the lesser shore birds, the seal that hauls out on an exposed rock and the porpoises rolling beyond the kep bed, he is a familiar presence.

In theory, the unfamiliar should register instantly and strongly. Yet on the morning a family of otters came frolicking past, I achieved the seemily impossible by looking at these four sleek and whiskered transients without seeing them. Only when I sighted along a sharper observer's arm did the otters become visible.

If you are used to seeing deer in your comings and goings, you may have been startled and amazed at the failure of an unpracticed eye to detect one of our larger Vancouver Island wild creatures in open country at relatively close range.

You know what a deer looks like in its natural environment. If your companion doesn't, his apparent myopia is explainable. From lack of conditioning he is unable to distinguish picture from frame.

(No harm there, unless he has a rifle in his hands and insists on seeing deer where they are not. Then he becomes a menace against which even a blaze-orange jacket and cap may not prevail.)

Perhaps looking without seeing is at root a form of mental laziness. The mud-tracking small boy who can't find his homework assignment even though it is right under his nose suffers from no such inability when it comes to cars. At the length of a city block, he can distinguish make and model with eerie accuracy.

Incidentally, if you want to check your powers of observation and retention, have a go at the Scouting test known as Kim's game. Get someone to range 20 small, varied objects on a table-top, allow you a five-second look, then cover the lot. Your task is to list what you've seen.

Arena Resounds For Right Show

By BRYAN HAY
Times Staff

Jack Morgan, here's an abject and grovelling apology on my part.

I've scoffed, sneered and sniffed at the acoustics in the big Blanshard boxla barn. But no more.

The sound at this week's Johnny Cash show converted me.

It was fantastic — with the one hitch of June Carter being so-badly miked that one could hardly hear her dulcet tones . . . but that was an electronic problem and nothing to do with you and yours.

And, the more than 7,000 people who jammed the arena got their money's worth.

It goes to prove two things:

That given the right show, with the right sound, Memorial is the ideal place to present a big show;

And that the Garden City is ripe for more large-name country spectaculars.

On the second point, John Ansell of CJVI, local sponsors of the Cash appearance, assures me that the station is planning further shows featuring famed C and W stars over the course of the coming winter . . . details of which will be mentioned in this corner as soon as they are available.

Even though it was a flying visit to the Garden City for the Cash show — Big John zoomed in on his chartered jet a little more than an hour before show time and zoomed out again an hour or so after the curtain went down — he didn't short-change Victoria fans.

From the opening chords of Big River to the closing chorus of his encore, he had those 7,000 people in the palm of his hand . . . even those sitting in the late-sale rush seats behind the stage to whom he turned and sang directly several times.

The show was tight, controlled and professional, with every homily pertaining to family, country and God clicked neatly into place.

And that was what the people wanted.

Even if it did cloy a little too sickly sweet a ttimes.

Folk buffs are in for a "blast from the past" in two weeks time at the McPherson when the Kingston Trio comes to town.

However, the group coming here, Oct. 28, is not the original Kingston Trio of Tom Dooley, Greenback Dollar, M.T.A. and Tiajuana Jail fame but a new group with only two things in common with the trio who put folk music on the map in the late Fifties and early Sixties.

They do all the old and beloved material and Bob Shane — now approaching 40 — is still lead singer and main guitar picker.

The other members of the group hand-picked by Shane when he decided to reform the Trio last year are Pat Horine on bass and Jim Connor, who has an impressive list of credits in bluegrass bands on banjo and harp.

Well, the Good Times sure rolled through Victoria in one heck of a hurry.

With the speed of a souped-up '51 Merc, they rolled into the Haida a week ago Friday and trucked on out again Thursday after playing to houses delicately described by a theatre spokesman as "a disaster."

Pity.

Because Let The Good Times Roll as well as being a good movie is also a set period piece, just as freaky today as those 1930s flicks which crop up with depressing regularity on Ch. 13.

It's memorable not only for the "golden oldies" but also for the spliced-in news clips — including some almost-obscene footage of then vice-president Richard Nixon campaigning as a gas jockey and leering while wiping windshields.

However, for the few who did manage to catch the film, it no doubt reinforced their impressions — if their impressions needed reinforcing — that some of the old-time cats like Bo Diddley and Chuck Berry can still outplay and outrock the current crop of pop stars.

'OLD BUT NEW' sound comes from revamped Kingston Trio which will be here Oct. 28.

UVIC THEATRE SCHEDULE

A schedule of theatrical events for the fall-winter-spring semesters of the University of Victoria theatre department was released this week.

All will be open to the theatre-going public of Greater Victoria.

A play by Moliere — Les Femmes Savantes (The Learned Ladies) — will be presented in English translation at the Phoenix Theatre from Oct. 25 to Nov. 3.

Director of the comedy is faculty member Dr. Harvey Miller.

In December a highlight of last Christmas season will be reflected in the performance of Adam, a medieval mystery play from the 12th century at Maltwood Museum.

David Parry is again the director.

During the mid-winter fine arts mini-festival at UVic, the Phoenix stage will offer a mime presentation (probably in multi-media style) under the direction of Kaz Piesowocki. This will take place between Feb. 1 and 9.

In late March the department will again collaborate with Victoria Theatre Guild at Langham Court, in a presentation of Kurt Weill's Threepenny Opera. This will be directed by UVic's Giles Hogya.

A series of productions by graduate and under-graduate students will conclude the on-campus season in early March.

Young Canadian Soloists Perform With Symphony

A program that offers the various delights of the Sibelius violin concerto, Rachmaninoff's scintillating and romantic second piano concerto and Butterfly's haunting aria, One Fine Day, promises to titillate the taste buds of most music lovers.

It's next for Victoria Symphony patrons, coming Oct. 21-22.

The concerts present three young Canadian artists — CBC Talent Festival winners — and this makes the occasion all the more important.

Soprano Anna Chornodolska, pianist Linn Hendry and violinist Malcolm Lowe are, by virtue of their success in the CBC festival, the best of the best of the oncoming generation of artists. The CBC festival is conducted yearly on a Canada-wide basis and is searchingly judged at all competition levels.

Chornodolska is Austrian-born and came to Canada with her Ukrainian parents at an early age, growing up in Montreal.

She studied music and voice at the Quebec Conservatoire and McGill University, has made recital tours of France and has sung in CBC opera productions and with the Montreal Symphony.

A native British Columbian, Linn Hendry came to Victoria several years ago from the Okanagan to study with Robin Wood. Now a graduate of the Victoria Conservatory, she has performed with orchestras in Quebec City, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria as well as with the Carnegie Festival Orchestra in Dunfermline, Scotland.

She has also appeared in solo recital and chamber music concerts in France and England as well as in Canada, and been a regular soloist on CBC radio for the past two years.

Those who have heard him perform consider the violin artistry of 20-year-old Lowe altogether amazing.

A Manitoba farm boy until his parents moved to Regina in 1962, he has been the recipient of many scholarships and awards and won first place in both the Montreal Symphony competition and CBC Festival in 1971-72.

At the present time he is in his third year of study with Ivan Galamian and Jaime Laredo at the Curtis Institute of Music.

He has been guest artist with several major Canadian orchestras.

The three young artists will also be presented in recital at the McPherson Playhouse on Oct. 25.

The program for the symphony pair of concerts conducted by Laszlo Gati will include Rossini's overture, Scala di Seta, and Bachianas Brasilieros No. 5 by Villa Lobos.

First of the Duncan series by Victoria Symphony will take place Friday with Hendry and Lowe as guest artists.

Recital at St. John's

The Wednesday evening recital at St. John's Church next week will feature a group of instrumentalists and soprano soloist Dawn Hood.

Mrs. Hood is the gifted wife of trumpeter Boyde Hood and was outstanding last winter in an Opera Workshop production of Pergolesi's La Serva Padrona.

She will sing an aria from Bach's St. John Passion on Wednesday's program.

Instrumentalists taking part are UVic music graduate, teacher and organist of St. Matthias Church, Frances Carter, who will perform on organ and harpsichord; Lanny Pollet, flutist, Uvic music lecturer and member of the Pacific Wind Quintet; Glen Fast, recorder, fourth year music student at Uvic, and Linda Hougland-Daniels, cellist.

The program will include works by Telemann, Purcell, Pachelbel and Hans Martin Linde.

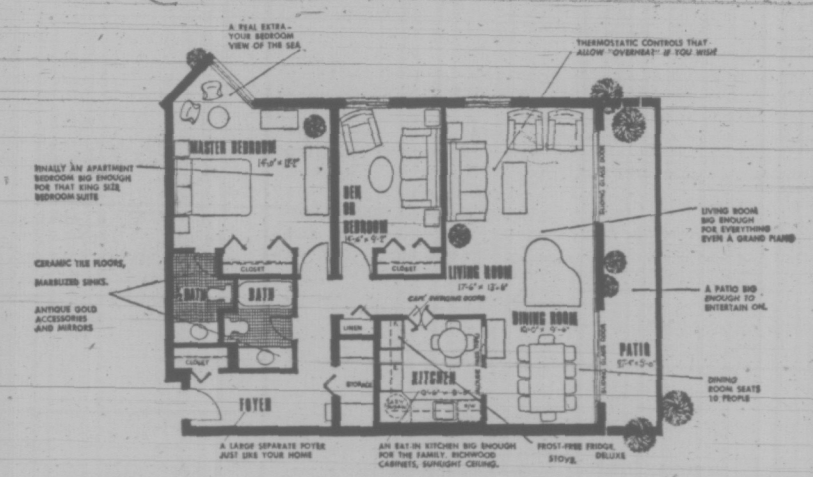
The Hotcake.
Our $47,500 Beach Drive Apartment
that's selling like there's no tomorrow



Sure this apartment would sell like a "Hotcake" anywhere — but put it on Beach Drive in Oak Bay where the high cost of land doesn't usually allow for so much space and value at such a moderate price — and you can really see what the excitement is all about.

And there's even more to the Hotcake than the floor plan shows. Like undercover electronically secured parking for each and every apartment, laundries on every floor, EVEN room for freezers. And a sauna, a therapeutic pool, exercise pavillion, plus a hobby room.

But that's not all. The Royal Alexander has three other one and two-bedroom models from just $29,900 to $49,900.

Come see them quick because we won't have them long.

Stalemate May Cause Loss of Funds to Aid Deaf

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Federal funds promised to help the deaf and hard of hearing may be lost because of lack of action by those who need them.

Mrs. Louise Olson, treasurer of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute of Vancouver Island, says the government has given a promise of funds once a national institute is formed.

To help form such a group a federal grant of $50,000 financed a meeting in Ottawa last May, attended by 200 people.

Stemming out of the conference, a committee of 24 people, two from each province and another four representing French-speaking people in Ontario and Quebec was established.

Called the Council of Organizations Serving the Deaf, the committee has met a stalemate. It asked that all organizations send in briefs, outlining the needs of the deaf and hard of haring. Only three briefs have been received.

Mrs. Olson says the main stumbling block is lack of communication. Radio and television are of no use to the deaf and she is hoping that newspaper coverage may be able to bridge the gap.

"We have no idea how many deaf and hard of hearing people there are in Victoria," she admits, "but a survey has indicated there are 50,000 deaf people in Canada.

"There could be twice as many who are hard of hearing."

Her organization is concerned that unless the national committee receives backing from as many deaf and hard of hearing people as possible, the national institute will never be formed.

"The basic fact is they (the deaf) don't know what is happening," she says. "The shame of it is that it is the children who are coming up now who will suffer if no action is taken."

Her organization mans an office in room 208, 1029 Douglas, from noon to 3 p.m. Mondays, Wednesday and Fridays. The phone number is 384-8535.

She warns that provincial government assistance could also be lost through lack of action.

Instruction for the deaf and hard of hearing is available in the primary and elementary schools. However, there is no such instruction for the hard of hearing past the elementary stage and deaf children must go to Jericho High School in Vancouver to continue their schooling past that level.

John Walsh, superintendent of special services for the provincial department of education will attend a meeting to be held 8 p.m. Oct. 24 in the Dominion Hotel.

Mrs. Olson is hoping that many of the problems facing handicapped children and their families will be aired at this meeting.

She's also hoping the meeting will be the catalyst that will help make a national institute a reality.

"If it (the national body) doesn't go now," she says, "we will be back to the Stone Age again."

Virus Suspect In MS

BOSTON (UPI) — Three doctors from Massachusetts General Hospital say one of the strongest clues yet indicates that multiple sclerosis may be caused by a virus.

Reporting in the current New England Journal of Medicine, the doctors said they found that 14 confirmed MS victims in Mansifeld Mass., had lived there in 1932 when a pond and city waterways were found to be highly contaminated with bacteria. All were about 14 years old at the time.

The disease is a neuromuscular disorder in which the fatty tissue around the nerves breaks down and resulting scars slow or block electrical impulses between the brain and muscles. The result can be total or partial disability.

The doctors who reported on the Mansfield cases are David C. Poskanzer, Richard Eastman and Jean Sheridan.

Their research began after one of Poskanzer's patients from Mansfield mentioned that there seemed to be a high incidence of the disease there.

Of the 14 cases in the community of 1,000 persons, nine grew up there and eight of the nine lived within several blocks of each other.

Recent research has indicated that even though a person may contract MS as a teen-ager, the disease fails to produce symptoms until young adulthood or middle age.

ANOTHER MYSTERY is revealed for city kids, five-year-old Brenda Couvillon and her 10-year-old brother, from Windsor, Ont., who had never seen pumpkins growing before they happened on this autumn field.

Cafe Deaths In 6th Place

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sudden death from choking on food, called a "cafe coronary" because it usually occurs in a restaurant and resembles a heart attack, is the sixth leading cause of accidental death in the U.S., according to a report published in a magazine for doctors.

"It is remarkable that the number of deaths due to food asphixiation exceeds those due to such familiar mechanisms as aircraft accidents, firearms and lighting," said the report by Dr. R. K. Haugen, a Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., pathologist.

National Safety Council statistics show 2,417 deaths in 1968 and 2,641 in 1969 from "inhalation of food," which is more than the 2,300-plus accidental firearms deaths each year (not including homicide and suicides), the nearly 2,000 annual deaths from aircraft accidents and about 130 annual lighting deaths.

Motor vehicle deaths lead the accidental list and falls are second.

Iron-in-Bread Regulations Draws Strong Criticism

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In an order criticized by some doctors as a dangerous human experiment, the U.S. government Friday ordered the bakeries to double the iron content in white bread.

The Food and Drug Administration said it was issuing the order, after three years of study and controversy, because research indicated Americans are not getting enough iron in their diet — partly because of the declining use of iron cookware. It will go into effect in six months.

Dr. William H. Crosby, chief of hematology at the Scripps Clinic in La Jolla, Calif., said there has been "absolutely no work done" to demonstrate that more iron in bread would be safe or effective.

"The manufacturers would not and could not provide such evidence," he said. "The fact that it may not be safe is really unconscionable."

Crosby said excessive iron can cause cirrhossis of the liver and pancreas, diabetes, heart failure and impotence in males.

Dr. Margaret Ann Krikker of Albany, N.Y., a general practitioner who has treated iron-related disorders and who helped circulate a petition against the propsoal signed by more than 100 doctors, said:

"This is an experiment, in my view an irresponsible experiment, unprecedented in the history of mankind . . . I predict a very significant portion of the population will have an iron overload in 10 years."

Dr. Alexander Schmidt, FDA commissioner, said he realized there was "legitimate concern" from physicians who have said the move might result in too much iron in the diet — a potentially dangerous situation since the body can store and use iron but not eliminate it.

But he added: "As people's eating habits change, a significant number of people in the United States are getting less and less iron and becoming anemic. Some very good surveys have shown that as many as a quarter of young women in some areas have iron deficiency anemia . . ."

The new level of iron for enriched flour will be 40 milligrams per pound, compared to a present range of 13 to 16.5 mgs; for enriched bread it will be 25 mgs., compared to 8-12.5 resently.

Canadian Doctors Adopting New Sterilization Technique

EDMONTON (CP) — "Belly-button surgery" allows women to be sterilized as easily as men, says gynecologist Dr. D. M. Buchanan.

Imported from Europe, the surgical technique — otherwise known as laparoscopy, requires two pencil-wide punctures, one usually in the navel and the other in the abdomen.

Dr. Buchanan said only a tiny scar is left and the woman has to remain in hospital for only one day.

One gynecologist said one patient who had a laparoscopy went dancing the day she was released from hospital and another went skiing. This was a sharp contrast to the standard sterilization method of tubular ligation, where a woman often was in great pain for several days after the operation.

1,000 WOMEN

Dr. Buchanan estimated that about 1,000 women have had the laparoscopy operation since it was introduced in the city about three years ago.

The operation, developed about 20 years ago is not widely used in Canada.

"I don't know why it hasn't caught on here," Dr. Buchanan said.

Dr. K. H. Finzer, who introduced the technique to the Charles Camsell Hospital, said part of the reason may be that it takes doctors some time to get used to it.

About 20 doctors in the city can perform the surgery and most of the hospitals have the equipment—or are getting it—necessary for the operation.

"This is the only method of sterilization of women," Dr. Finzer said. "It's safe, reliable and a minimum of expenditure in time and money."

Once doctors become used to the technique, the operation takes about 20 to 30 minutes, the same as for the standard ligation.

Dr. Buchanan said any couple wanting sterilization as a permanent method of birth control must decide between themselves and their doctor which partner should be sterilized.

"If there are no problems it's a toss-up," said Dr. L. M. Dushinski, a urologist who performs vasectomies on men.

Dr. Dushinski said a vasectomy does not reduce the sexual drive. About 42 per cent of a recent study group reported an increase in sexual drive after the operation.

Vasectomy is a relatively simple operation that may be done under local anesthetic in a doctor's office. Ligation is done in hospital under general anesthetic.

Dr. Dushinski said a man becomes sterile about six weeks after a vasectomy.

REVERSIBILITY

A vasectomy is reversible, although reversal success depends on several factors such as the technique used and the length of time between the operations. Laparoscopy is usually not reversible.

Dr. Dushinski said he averaged about 15 vasectomies a week two years ago but now is doing three to four.

Part of the reason for the boom a few years ago, he said, was that sterilization became socially acceptable and talked about. Consequently, persons who might have been thinking about sterilization for years finally had the operation.

The backlog now had been taken care of and men currently requesting vasectomies were usually younger than before.

Doctors said they prefer their sterilization patients be older than 30 but exceptions are made in particular cases.
